Introduction

As you may recall, in sixth grade, you learned about citizenship and the values that make a good citizen. You are also aware of the connection between moral and civic education. This grade level is entirely dedicated to citizenship education, with the first unit covering the definition of citizenship, its essence, characteristics of good citizenship, and the significance of good citizenship. This unit also examines how a person obtains and loses citizenship. This unit will conclude by discussing some key aspects of Ethiopian citizenship law.

Unit Outcomes

At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

- Describe the concept of rule of law
- Identify sources of law
- Value the importance of rule of law
- Identify the manifestations of respecting rule of law
- Explain the rule of law and rule of man
- Comprehend factors affecting rule of law

1.1 Citizenship

This section will teach you about the essence of citizenship, the characteristics of good citizenship, and the significance of good citizenship. However, before diving into each section, please form a group of five students and try to discuss the following questions based on your prior knowledge.

- What do you understand when we say citizenship?
- Is there any difference between citizen and citizenship?

1.1.1 The Essence of Citizenship

Before discussing about the essence of citizenship, it is necessary to define what it means to be a citizen. A citizen is a person who has specific rights and responsibilities under the law. Citizens are granted specific rights and benefits by the state. Citizens are expected to follow their country's rules and defend it against its enemies in exchange. As Ethiopian citizens, we have the right to express ourselves, to be protected by the law, and to bear responsibilities such as obeying the law and paying taxes. As a result, a citizen is someone who has the right to be called a citizen.

Citizenship in turn refers to full and responsible membership of the state. In this situation, membership refers to a political society in which members have a reciprocal obligation of duty to the State and the State has an obligation of protection to the member. Therefore, citizenship is a legal status and an identity

Citizenship is both a legal status and a sense of identity.

case study

In a small village, there were two children. These were children who helped their parents with various tasks and were well-liked by their family as well as the local community. Teachers who arrived in that small village realized it was time for the children to return to school. As a result, the teachers approached the children's parents and asked them to send their children to school the following school year. After carefully listening to the teachers' ideas, the children's parents stated that they did not agree with the suggestion and did not want to send their children to school. The parents of the children claimed that rather than sending their children to school, it would be far better for them to obtain and continue to receive much more assistance in their daily activities from them.

Based on the above case study answer and discuss the questions below with a group of five students:

- What do you think will be the end of this story?
- How convincing is the parents' justification for not sending their children to school?
- Do you believe that a child's right to attend school is only dependent on his or her parents' goodwill?

1.1.2 Features of Good Citizenship

- What exactly does it mean to be a good citizen? Discuss with your parents, write down your ideas in your exercise book, and then reflect on them in your classroom.
- Consider a person in your community who you believe is a good citizen and list three of his or her characteristics.

Nobody is born as either a good or a bad citizen. Good citizenship is taught to us by our families, communities, friends, and teachers. A good citizen is someone who:

- respects others,
- is helpful of others,
- listens to other people's opinions,
- helps people who can't help themselves,
- lives in harmony with other members of society,
- is always willing to learn, and
- is aware of his or her societal responsibilities and rights.

Story

During the annual school Parents' Day celebration, a student who performed exceptionally ranked first in his/her class and received a certificate of recognition in front of his/her family and other students. Of course, that was not the only honor granted upon him/her that memorable day. The school has also established a training program to recognize students who excel in co-curricular activities each year. Most students at the school have always hoped to receive this special award and bring joy to their families. That is why everyone who attends the annual Parents' Day celebrations is eager to know who the winner is this year.

Despite the fact that the time had come to reveal the name of the year's special award-winner, the program host chose to highlight the award-winner's special contribution to the students, parents, and special guest of the day.

According to the program's host, the award-winner is known for following the rules and regulations of the school. The awardee is known not only for following the rules and regulations of the school, but also for raising awareness among other students about the importance of following the rules and regulations of the school. The awardee also contributes significantly to the school by participating in various clubs and even taking the initiative to establish and lead anti-corruption clubs. By living in harmony with students of various ages, religions, languages, and ethnic groups, the award-winner sets an example for students both inside and outside of his/her class.

The award-winner loves his/her country and aspires to raise the national flag on a global stage, just like athletes Haile G/Selassie and Derartu Tulu. Haile G/Selassie worked hard to make his dream a reality, and he won a gold medal in athletics at the woreda level school competition. After highlighting the awardee's significant contributions in this and other areas, the program host prepares to call the student's name. However, all of the students are shouting together by calling out the name of the students. As a result, the program host confirmed, and the student received his/her award from the guest of honor for his/her outstanding contribution of the year.

- What do you understand from the story presented?
- Is the student in the story presented, a good citizen? If yes, try to list those characters that qualify him/her for an award?
- What is holding you back from doing the good deeds that the student in the story did?

Based on the preceding story, we will examine a few of the characteristics of a good citizen.

A) Obey the law: the first and most important public duty of a good citizen is to obey the law. A law is a set of rules established by a community that governs how people act and behave. A good citizen follows the rules, obeys parents, teachers, and those in positions of authority, observes just laws, and upholds democratic principles. As a result, in the preceding story, one of the students' major contributions was stated as respecting the school's rules and regulations. Indeed, every one of you is responsible for adhering to the school's rules and regulations.

- What if students of your school did not follow rules and respect one another?

B) Responsibility: is the second and most important characteristic of good citizenship. Responsibility entails taking action and encompasses many aspects of what we consider to be good citizenship. You might want to emphasize that one of the primary responsibilities of students is to learn. At home, you are expected to complete your homework, and at school, you are expected to respect your classmates and teachers. You also have the responsibility to report any wrongdoing if you witness it. Furthermore, keeping the environment clean, obtaining an education, and participating in community service are all responsibilities of a good citizen. When you look at the student in the preceding story, you will notice that he/she is extremely responsible not only in class but also in his/her extracurricular activities.

- Are you responsible student?
- How do you know whether you are responsible or not?

C) Tolerance: is one of the important and critical characteristics of a good citizen that allows us to live peacefully. It also teaches us that other people have the right to hold opinions, beliefs, and positions that differ from ours. Tolerance is the ability and willingness to accommodate differences in ideas, outlooks, and points of view, among other things. A good citizen is expected to show the utmost respect for other people's religions, cultures, languages, and other value systems. This principle is related to the above-mentioned student, who was honored because he/she has developed the habit of tolerance both inside and outside of the classroom, allowing him/her to live in harmony with students of various ages, religions, languages, and ethnic groups.

- Do you prefer that your friends or classmates speak the same language, be of the same race, or hold the same beliefs as you, or do you believe that diversity is beneficial?

D) Patriotism: is another essential quality of a good citizen. A patriot should have a genuine affection for his or her country as well as a sense of participation in the country's social, political, and economic aspects. A good citizen is one who is willing to make sacrifices for the benefit of his/her country. For example, Ethiopia is a country of many heroes and patriots who have given their precious lives to ensure our country's independence and the ability to live in peace and dignity.

A good citizen is one who is willing to make sacrifices for the benefit of his/her country.

Of course, patriotism can be expressed in a variety of ways other than military service. For example, we can demonstrate our love for our country by engaging in diplomacy, education, medicine, agriculture, trade, and a variety of other activities. Artists, athletes, and other professionals who promote our country's name and flag on a global stage are also patriots because they are a source of pride for us. You have probably figured out why the student in the preceding story was named the best student of the year.

The student received the award not only for his/her love of his/her country, but also for his/her commitment to realizing his/her dream of raising his/her country's national flag on the world stage, as athletes Haile G/Selassie and Derartu Tulu have done.

- Can you mention some attributes of patriotism?
- What are the factors that weaken patriotic feelings?
- In your opinion, what should be done to increase Ethiopians' patriotic feelings?

In general, the qualities of a good citizen that we have discussed above are necessary for the proper exercise of every citizen's rights and responsibilities. As a result, as an Ethiopian citizen, you must possess and exercise those qualities of good citizenship at all times.

1.1.3 Importance of Good Citizenship

- Consider your school. What do you think would happen if all of the students, teachers, and administrators lacked good citizenship character?
- What kind of relationship would exist between students and teachers, students and the school administration, and within teachers themselves?
- Examine the image below closely and discuss with the student sitting next to you what you believe it represents.

Good citizenship qualities are important not only for instilling a strong moral code in individuals, but also for fostering a safe and supportive society while ensuring the survival of a democratic system. A healthy and long-lasting democratic society depends on good citizenship. Good citizenship also benefits the environment, making our country a better place. We determine our country's success, and we are all responsible for building and maintaining its strength.

- Do you believe that by carrying out your responsibilities, you can have a positive impact on your community?

Good citizenship is also essential for fostering constructive debate among people with opposing viewpoints. Good citizenship teaches students how to find common ground with people who are different from them. Good citizenship character fosters mutual respect and understanding, which in turn connects and develops a strong system for individuals to collaborate toward a common goal. This can encourage students to broaden their perspectives, think more deeply about societal injustices and oppression, and engage in constructive debates in order to resist all forms of extremism.

Mutual respect and understanding are fostered by good citizenship character.

Being able to challenge injustice and promote fairness is an important aspect of being a good citizen. One example is someone informing the authorities about a drug dealer or a theft in the neighborhood. One of the benefits of doing so is that it contributes to the safety of communities and the fairness of the judicial system. A good citizenship constantly upholds the concepts of justice and equality and encourages others to do the same. Violence will be reduced if every citizen works to promote fairness and confront injustice because people will not feel excluded and will not have negative opinions of others because everyone is working together.

- What would you do if you saw a student tearing up papers and throwing them in your classroom?

Good citizenship allows you to develop a sense of respect and care for other students, as well as to accept responsibility. If you can do this, others will appreciate and tolerate you, and violence based on religious, linguistic, ethnic, or other differences will be reduced. Specifically, the importance of good citizenship include but not limited to:

- instilling a strong moral code in individuals;
- fostering a safe and supportive society;
- making our country a better place;
- fostering constructive debate among people with opposing viewpoints;
- fosters mutual respect and understanding;
- collaborate toward a common goal;
- encourage students to broaden their perspectives;
- think more deeply about societal injustices and oppression;
- challenge injustice and promote fairness;
- develop a sense of respect and care for other students; and
- accept responsibility.

1.2 Ways of Acquiring and Losing Citizenship

- How does someone become a citizen of a country?
- Do you think that anyone, at any time, can travel to any country and become a citizen of that country?

Citizenship is a legal status earned by being a registered member of a country. Anyone can become a member of the state if they meet the legal conditions of the country. Citizenship is the virtue of being a citizen of a country in its simplest form. As a general rule, international law leaves it up to each state to define who its citizens are. As a result, different states have distinct rules and procedures in granting and loss of citizenship. In this section, we'll look at how a person can become a citizen of a country, and then at how a person can lose their citizenship.

1.2.1 Ways of Acquiring Citizenship

A person may obtain the nationality of a state in accordance with the state's rules, as described in the section's opening remark. As a result, the procedure for getting citizenship varies each country. However, the most prevalent methods of obtaining citizenship are as follows:

- Citizenship by Birth: Citizenship by birth is the most prevalent method of getting citizenship, and many countries use it. Right of soil is the term used to describe this notion. According to this idea, everyone born inside the territorial bounds of a state automatically becomes a citizen of that state. It simply means that you are eligible to become a citizen of a country if you were born there.

- Citizenship by Descent: A person can also become a citizen of a country based on the citizenship of one or both of his parents. This is referred to as the notion of blood right. This principle asserts that regardless of where children are born, their citizenship is decided by their parents' nationality.

- By Naturalization: Naturalization is the legal process by which a foreign individual becomes eligible to become a citizen of a specific country. A person who wishes to become a citizen through naturalization must fill out an application and submit a request for citizenship by naturalization. Naturalization can be obtained in a variety of methods, but for the purposes of this grade level, we will concentrate on only two of them: marriage and adoption.

upon application, a foreign national who marries a citizen of a certain country is granted citizenship of that country.

B) Citizenship by Adoption: A person or couple recognized as legal parents can adopt a kid born in another country and make him or her citizen. Before this may be given, however, certain steps must be undertaken. The following are some of the most prevalent eligibility criteria:

- The parents (couple or individual) must be permanent citizens of a state, either by birth or naturalization;
- the child must be under the age of 18; and
- the child must be a permanent citizen of the state from which he/she is adopted

- Can you list the different ways of acquiring citizenship?
  - What is the main difference between acquiring citizenship by birth and by naturalization?

1.2.2 Ways of Losing Citizenship

- How can a person lose his/her citizenship status?

Citizenship can be lost in a variety of ways, just as it can be gained in a variety of ways. A circumstance in which a citizen is no longer recognized a lawful citizen of the country is referred to as “loss of citizenship.” The process of losing citizenship, like the process of gaining citizenship, differs depending on where you live. Individuals who lost their citizenship, on the other hand, had one thing in common: they either did so voluntarily or were forced to do so forcefully without their consent.

- Voluntary loss of citizenship: The act of giving up one’s citizenship is referred to as “voluntary loss of citizenship.” The decision taken by a person who went to loss his or her citizenship status freely is the main focus here. Almost every country has its own set of requirements for citizens who wish to formally renounce their citizenship.

- Make a list of reasons why someone would voluntarily give up their citizenship and compare it to the list your partner is making next to you.
- Do you know or have you heard of anyone in your neighborhood who has given up their citizenship voluntarily?

- Involuntary loss of citizenship: Each state has its own set of rules governing citizenship. A citizen's citizenship may be revoked if he/she does not follow certain requirements. Of course, this might occur for a variety of reasons. However, losing one's citizenship involuntarily is not immediate; it must go through a series of steps in order to be revoked.

- Make a list of plausible reasons why someone might be forced to lose their citizenship involuntarily, and compare it to your partner's list.
- Do you know or have you heard of anyone who has been forced to lose their citizenship, whether locally or nationally?

1.3 Citizenship Law in Ethiopia

- Are you an Ethiopian citizen? If you answered yes, how did you come to be an Ethiopian citizen?

Ethiopia was a pioneer in African citizenship law, having enacted the first written citizenship law in 1930. Prior to it, citizenship was mostly defined by custom and tradition.

The Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopian (FDRE) constitution of 1995 provides certain fundamental ideas about citizenship in Ethiopia at current moment. According to Article 6 of the FDRE constitution, any person of either gender who has both or either Ethiopian parents is an Ethiopian citizen. As a result, the FDRE constitution recognizes the right to Ethiopian citizenship based on descent or blood.

A general proclamation on attaining Ethiopian citizenship through naturalization is also included in the FDRE constitution. The Ethiopian Nationality Proclamation No. 378/2003, on the other hand, specified the specifics of nationality.

Ethiopian nationality is inherited primarily by descent, according to Proclamation No. 378/2003 on Ethiopian Nationality. In the case of Ethiopia, there are no broad rights to citizenship based on birthplace on the land. The Proclamation also offers measures for naturalization-based acquisition after birth. A foreigner seeking Ethiopian nationality must, however, meet the following requirements:

- have reached the age of majority and be legally capable under Ethiopian law;
- have established his domicile in Ethiopia and lived in Ethiopia for a total of at least four years prior to the submission of his application;
- be able to communicate in any of the country's nations/nationalities' languages;
- have a sufficient and lawful source of income to support himself and his family;
- be a person of good character;
- have no criminal record;
- be able to show that he has been released from his previous nationality or that acquiring Ethiopian nationality will result in such a release, or that he is a stateless person; and
- be required to take the oath of allegiance stated in Article 12 of the Proclamation.

The declaration authorizes naturalization in “exceptional cases” in addition to conventional procedures. Allowing citizenship as a manner of giving special recognition to foreigners who have made an exceptional contribution to the country appears to be launched by the government or the state.

As a result, regardless of the qualifications specified above, a foreigner who has made a significant contribution in Ethiopia's interest may be granted Ethiopian citizenship by law

Foreigners who have made significant contributions to Ethiopia may be granted citizenship as a form of special recognition.

The modalities of loss of Ethiopian citizenship were also established in Proclamation No. 378/2003. According to the nationality proclamation, no Ethiopian may be stripped of his or her Ethiopian citizenship by a government decision unless he or she renounces his or her Ethiopian citizenship voluntarily or acquires another nationality in a method that the law considers voluntary. Article 33 (1) of the FDRE Constitution additionally declared that no Ethiopian national may be stripped of his or her Ethiopian citizenship against his or her choice. This means that under Ethiopian law, involuntary citizenship loss is not permitted.

Assume an Ethiopian mother and an American father have a child in France. Answer the following questions based on the Ethiopian citizenship law:

- What do you think a baby's citizenship would be?
- Is the newborn eligible to become an Ethiopian citizen? If the answer is yes, how can the baby become an Ethiopian citizen? Why not, if the answer is no?

Unit Summary

A citizen is a person who has specific rights and obligations under the laws of a country. Citizens are given certain rights and rewards by the government. Citizens are expected to respect the regulations of their country in exchange for protecting it against its adversaries. Citizenship is both a legal status and a personal identity. Our family, community, friends, and teachers teach us about good citizenship. A good citizen is someone who respects others, is helpful and considerate of others, listens to other people's opinions, helps people who can't help themselves, lives in harmony with other members of society, and is always open to learn. Students who practice good citizenship learn how to find common ground with those who are not like them. As a result, you must be a good citizen in order to make your school and community a better place for everyone.

Citizenship is a legal status earned by being a registered member of a country. Anyone can become a member of the state if they meet the legal conditions of the country. As a general rule, international law leaves it up to each state to define who its citizens are; as a result, citizenship laws in different countries handle the granting and loss of citizenship in different ways.

Ethiopia was a pioneer in African citizenship law, having enacted the first written citizenship law in 1930. At the moment, the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopian (FDRE) constitution of 1995 establishes some important principles governing citizenship in Ethiopia. According to Article 6 of the FDRE constitution, any person of either sex who has both or either parent who is Ethiopian is an Ethiopian citizen. The FDRE constitution thus enshrines the concept of the right of descent or blood to gain Ethiopian citizenship.

Unit Review Questions

Part I: Write “TRUE” if the statement is correct and “FALSE” if the statement is incorrect.

- 1) A citizen is a person who has certain rights but no obligations.
- 2) To be a good citizen one must be irresponsible.
- 3) All countries follow the same procedures in granting and loss of citizenship.

Part II: Each of the following questions or statements is followed by four suggested answers or completions. Select the one that is CORRECT in each case.

- 1) Which one of the following is CORRECT about citizenship?
  - a) is a legal status
  - b) refers to full and responsible membership of the state
  - c) a citizen is a person who holds the title of citizenship
  - d) all of the above
- 2) Which one of the following is NOT the feature of a good citizen?
  - a) expose any wrongdoing
  - b) who is willing to make sacrifices for his country's benefit
  - c) does not show respect towards others
  - d) upholds democratic principles
- 3) In diverse society, -----is important for peaceful coexistence?
  - a) misunderstanding
  - b) tolerance
  - c) mistreating
  - d) disregarding

Part III: In column 'A' you will find descriptions of various forms of acquiring citizenship and ways of acquiring citizenship in column 'B'. Match column 'A' with column 'B'

	A	B
1	Is usually referred to as right of soil.	A Citizenship by marriage
2	The principle of right of blood.	B Citizenship by adoption
3	A foreign national who marries a national of a certain country and acquire citizenship.	C Citizenship by birth
4	Acquire the citizenship of an individual that recognized as legal parents.	D Involuntary loss of citizenship E Citizenship by descent

Part IV: Short answer. Write the appropriate answer for the following question.

- 1) List at least four reasons why good citizenship is important?

UNIT

STATE AND GOVERNMENT

Introduction

As you may recall, the essence, characteristics, and importance of being a good citizen were discussed in the previous unit. You also learned how to obtain and lose citizenship. Moreover, you explored Ethiopian citizenship laws. Next, in order to understand one's rights and fulfill one's responsibilities, one must have a basic understanding of the state and government. Along these lines, we will discuss the concept of the State and its fundamental components in this unit. Following that, we will examine the meaning, functions, and forms of government. Finally, the unit discusses the similarities and differences between the State and the Government.

Unit Outcomes

At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

- Define the concept of state
- Distinguish the elements of the state
- List the functions of government
- Explain the differences between state and government

2.1 The Concept of State

- What do you understand when we say State?
- Can you name a few African and global states that come to your mind?
- Is Ethiopia a State? Why?

The term “State” refers to an organized political community governed by a single authority. In this context, a state is a formally established political community governed by a government. As a result, a state is a group of people, more or less numerous, who live permanently on a specific territory, have their own government to which the majority of the population submits, and are free from outside interference. The existence of the state is required because it arises from the fundamental needs of life. The goal of establishing a state is to use laws to settle disputes between and among individuals. Over 200 countries now exist in the world, with Ethiopia being the oldest in both Africa and the world

A State is a formally established political community that operates under the authority of a government.

2.2 Elements of the State

- Is Ethiopia a State? Why?

It is common to identify the State by its fundamental elements, which include population, territory, government, and sovereignty, as defined by the above definitions of State.

2.2.1 Population

The population is an important element of the state. The size of the population required to establish a state cannot be fixed. The people of a state do not have to be of a single race, religion, language, or culture. The modern state claims to be capable of reconciling the interests of various groups of its citizens. As a result, for the existence of the state population is required.

The people of a state do not have to be of a single race, religion, language, or culture.

- Do you have any idea how diverse the Ethiopian population is?

2.2.2 Territory

A defined territory is regarded as yet another critical element of the State. No State can exist without a fixed territory. Territory is required for people to live and organize socially and politically. The size of a State's territory, like its population, cannot be fixed. We can find a small territory state, such as Vatican City, as well as a large territory state, such as Russia. States operate within a defined territory delimited by borders, regulating the flow of people, money, and goods across those boundaries. Possession of a fixed territory is, therefore, regarded as an essential attribute of the State by international law.

No State can exist without a fixed territory.

- Can you list the countries bordering Ethiopia to the north, south, east, and west?

Ethiopia is bordered by Eritrea on the north, Djibouti on the northeast, Somalia on the east, Kenya on the south, and South Sudan and Sudan on the west.

The Two Neighbors!

There were two neighbors living in the same village. These people have lived in the area for a long time and are well-known in the community. However, miscommunication developed between the two neighbors over time. Their disagreement stemmed from a land dispute. Neighbors frequently argued that they had overstepped their bounds. They attempted to resolve the problem on their own but were unable to do so. When the local elders noticed the disagreement between the neighbors, they tried their best to solve the problem, but the disagreement persisted because the two sides were unable to agree on the solution proposed by the elders.

- What do you think these neighbors would do if they couldn't resolve their issues on their own or with the assistance of local elders?
- Who will provide the final say in such disputes?

2.2.3 Government

The third and most important component of a state is government. There can be no State without government. The government is the operational arm of the state as well as a powerful political organization. The government is in charge of carrying out State authority and tasks. The government also makes, enforces, and interpret state laws.

The government is the operational arm of the state as well as a powerful political organization..

- In a democratic state, who has the authority to make, enforce, and interpret laws?
- What do you think will happen in a country if there is no government or if the government that is in power does not carry out its responsibilities? Do you, for example, believe that students like you can obtain a good education?

2.2.4 Sovereignty

- Why is a state's sovereignty important?

Sovereignty is commonly thought to have two distinct aspects: internal and external. Internal sovereignty refers to sovereignty within the jurisdiction of a state. A state with internal sovereignty has the authority and capability to exercise command over its society. The relationship between a sovereign power and other states is referred to as external sovereignty. The external sovereignty of a state allows it to engage in independent relations with other countries. That is the supremacy of the state over all foreign wills, whether of individuals or states. Sovereignty is, therefore, regarded as the most vital and necessary component of the State. Ethiopia is a recognized sovereign state, complete with its own flag and national anthem.

Sovereignty is commonly thought to have two distinct aspects: internal and external.

- Do you know the national anthem of Ethiopia?

case study

For a long time, Ethiopia's sovereignty was protected not only by international law, but also by the scarification of our forefathers and mothers, grandparents, and great-grandparents. Ethiopian heroes have defeated foreign invaders who attempted to conquer and violate our country's sovereignty in numerous battles throughout history. As a result, Ethiopia has kept its independence and celebrates Victory Day, in contrast to many other African countries that celebrate Independence Day.

- Can you name at least three Ethiopian heroes who have died defending Ethiopian sovereignty?
- What, in your opinion, are the main responsibilities of the young generation in preserving Ethiopian sovereignty?

2.3 Functions of Government

- What is the purpose of government?
- What are the primary responsibilities of government?

Citizens in any state expect their government to perform certain functions. Although government functions vary by state, the following are some of the most common:

- Maintain social stability
- Provide public services
- Provide national security
- Making economic decisions

In fact, in order to carry out these responsibilities, the government must make decisions that are binding on all citizens of the state. In the sections that follow, we will go over each of the aforementioned government functions in greater detail.

2.3.1 Maintaining Law and Order

- What role can a democratic government play in ensuring social stability?

One of the most important functions and goals of a democratic government is the maintenance of law and order. Governments accomplish this by passing laws that govern the activities of all members of society. As a result, governments provide mechanisms for resolving conflicts among members of groups and maintaining social stability. Government laws help to keep the peace and protect people's rights, property, and lives. Furthermore, the government provides mechanisms like courts to assist citizens in resolving disputes in a timely and orderly manner. To control and contain inter-personal conflict, the government imposes restrictions on what individuals are and are not permitted to do.

Figure 2.6 Maintaining law and order

2.3.2 Providing Public Services

- Could you name some of the government services available in your area?

Another important function of government is to provide essential public services that enable community life and promote general well-being. A public service is one that the government provides to those who live within its borders, either directly or through the funding of private service providers. Public services are those deemed so important to life that their universal provision should be guaranteed for moral reasons. They have the potential to be associated with fundamental human rights. Public services include fire protection, law enforcement, environmental protection, public housing, and public transportation.

A public service is one that the government provides to those who live within its borders, either directly or through the funding of private service providers.

- If Ethiopia is invaded by another country, who do you believe will defend the country?

One of the most important functions of government is to provide common defense and security for its citizens. Governments must guard against both external and internal threats. As a result, national security is a top priority for each sovereign state. The government creates and maintains national defense forces, which include military troops, armament, and operations, as well as peacekeeping missions, to carry out this function. Governments should maintain good relations with foreign countries in addition to ensuring national security.

One of the most important functions of government is to provide common defense and security for its citizens.

2.3.4 Making Economic Decisions

No country can meet all of its citizens' needs or desires. Normally, the government works to promote economic growth and stability by controlling inflation, stimulating trade, and regulating natural resource development. Additionally, the government enacts regulations that shape the country's economic environment. As a result, making economic decisions is another important function of government.

Another important function of government is economic decision-making.

2.4 Forms of the Government

Governments come in a variety of forms. At this level, we use the number of people wielding sovereign power as a criterion for clearly understanding the various forms of government. As a result, the forms of government can be classified based on the number of people exercising sovereign powers as follows:

2.4.1 Monarchy

monarchy is a form of government in which sovereign power is vested in a single individual, the monarch, who has hereditary rights to rule as the head of state. The monarch may be a king or a queen. The throne is usually passed down to the eldest son or the closest male descendant.

- Could you give some examples of countries that still have monarchies?
- Have you ever heard about Ethiopia's monarchy? If this is the case, please tell to your partners.

2.4.2 Aristocracy

another type of government in which sovereign power is vested in a class of people who are thought to be superior and best qualified to rule is aristocracy. Governmental power is concentrated in the hands of a few, while government administration is ostensibly carried out for the benefit of the many.

2.4.3 Dictatorship

one person or a small group of people wields unlimited power. Force is used to maintain power. The majority of dictators rule authoritarian or totalitarian regimes.

2.4.4 Democracy

Democracy is a form of government in which the rulers are chosen by the citizens. The attributes of a truly democratic government set it apart from other kinds of government. In a democracy, the government attempts to foster equality so that everyone has an equal chance to develop. Free and open elections are held in all true democracies. All eligible citizens have a say in how their country is run and a voice through elected officials. This is merely an introduction remark regarding democracy; the next chapter will go into great detail about it.

2.5 Differences between State and Government

- Could you describe some of the differences between the government and the state?

The terms state and government are frequently used interchangeably. However, it is difficult to find parallels between the state and the government. The apparatus in charge of governing the country is known as the government, whereas the state is a synonym for the country. For example, when we say the State of Ethiopia, we mean the entire country of Ethiopia. In contrast, when we refer to Ethiopia's government, we mean the three branches of government namely: the legislative, the executive, and the judicial organ. Government is in charge of all authority and functions on behalf of the state

The government is in charge of all authority and functions on behalf of the state.

The following are the basic distinctions found between the State and the Government:

i) Government is only an element of the State : As previously stated, a State consists of four essential components: population, territory, government, and sovereignty. As a result, government is only an element of the state that acts on its behalf.

ii) State is abstract whereas government is concrete: State is an abstract concept that cannot be seen. Government, on the other hand, is concrete; it can be viewed as a group of people cooperating to exercise State power. The government is made up of people who are elected by the people. It has a clear structure and form.

iii) Government is organized only by a portion of the population of the State: The State encompasses the entire population. Government, on the other hand, is formed by the representatives of the people. The government of the state is made up of only a few people who are elected to serve as people's representatives.

iv) Membership of a State is compulsory but not of government: Everyone is considered a citizen by the state. Citizens constitute the entirety of the state's population. In most cases, every individual is usually granted automatic membership (citizenship) in a state. Government membership, on the other hand, is not automatic. No one can be forced into joining a government. Rather, the one who qualifies the requirement of the state can run for office, be elected as a people's representative, and join the government of their choice.

- Recalling the topic covered in unit one, talk with your partners about how to obtain citizenship in Ethiopia.

v) Each state has the same essential elements, but the forms and features of government vary from state to state: Each State has a common characteristics feature like population, territory, government, and sovereignty. Governments, on the other hand, can take various systems, such as parliamentary, presidential, or a combination of the two. It could also be democratic, monarchical, aristocratic, or dictatorial in nature.

vi) State is permanent but government is temporary: Governments come and go all the time. A presidential election, or even a revolution, could result in a complete change of government. The State exists indefinitely. It will go on indefinitely as long as it maintains its sovereignty.

The following table summarizes the key distinctions between state and government

N.o	Difference between state and government
	state	government
2	A state is made up of people, territory, government, and sovereignty.	The government is only one component of the state.
3	The concept of state is abstract and invisible.	Government is visible and concrete.
4	Membership in a state is compulsory.	Membership in a government is entirely voluntary.
5	The state has the original power.	The government derives its powers from the state.
6	Every state has four essential elements in common.	The forms and characteristics of government differ from one state to another.
7	The state is relatively stable.	Government is temporary; it comes and goes.

Unit Summary

A state is a formally established political community that is governed by a government. A modern state consists of four essential elements: population, territory, government, and sovereignty. A democratic government is responsible for maintaining law and order, ensuring the safety of people and property, managing the economy, and protecting the state from foreign threats. As a result, the effective functioning of a government is required for the existence of peace.

Governments come in a variety of forms. We use the number of people wielding sovereign power as a criterion for clearly understanding the various forms of government. As a result, the forms of government can be classified based on the number of people exercising sovereign powers as monarchy, aristocracy, dictatorship, and democracy.

Despite the fact that the terms state and government are frequently used interchangeably, they are not synonymous. There is a distinction between the state and the government. The state consists of four essential elements, one of which is government. State is an abstract concept as well, whereas government is concrete and can be thought of as a group of people working together to exercise State powers. Furthermore, the State is made up of the entire population, whereas the government is made up of people's representatives. Everyone is considered a citizen by the state. Citizens constitute the entire population of the state. Membership in the government is not automatically granted. No one can be forced into joining a government. Moreover, the State exists indefinitely. It will go on indefinitely as long as it maintains its sovereignty.

Review Question

Part I: Write “TRUE” if the statement is correct and “FALSE” if the statement is incorrect.

- 1) A State is a formally established political community that operates under the authority of a government.
- 2) The population of a state must be of a single race, religion, language, and culture.
- 3) There can be no State without government.
- 4) The government, unlike the state, exists indefinitely. It retains power indefinitely as long as the state retains sovereignty.

Part II: Each of the questions or statements below is followed by four possible responses or completions. In each case, choose the CORRECT option.

- 1) Which of the following is NOT a necessary component of the state?
  - A)Population
  - B)Territory
  - C)Political Party
  - D)Sovereignty
- 2) ----- is a form of government in which sovereign power is vested in a group of people considered superior and best qualified to rule.
  - A)Monarchy
  - B)Aristocracy
  - C)Dictatorship
  - D)Democracy
- 3) Which of the following statement best describes the State?
  - A)is made up of the entire population
  - B)membership is not automatically granted
  - C)is concrete
  - D)is made up of people's representatives

Part III: Short answer. Write the appropriate answers to the following questions.

- 1) What are the four main functions of government?
- 2) What happens if one of the elements of the State's is missing?

DEMOCRACY

Introduction

Welcome to the third unit of this textbook. This unit is devoted to the idea of democracy. The concept of democracy is one of the most frequently discussed topics in our daily lives. As a result, one of the primary goals of this unit will be to explain what the central concept of democracy entails. The various forms of democracy will also be discussed briefly. It is critical to discuss the mechanisms (ways) by which democracy is exercised. The unit will also include a brief discussion of democratic perspectives. Finally indigenous democratic values are explored..

Unit Outcomes

At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

- Explain the meaning of democracy
- List the forms of democracy
- Identify the ways of exercising democracy
- Appreciate indigenous democratic values
- Differentiate procedural and substantive democracy

3.1 The Meaning of Democracy

- What do you know about democracy? Could you please explain your ideas to the class?
- Have you ever made a decision based on democratic principles? If so, could you please share your experience with the class?

The term democracy is derived from two Greek words: demos, which means “the people,” and kratos, which means “to rule.” These two words are combined to form democracy, which literally means “rule of the people.” In this context, the term democracy refers to the concept of rule by the people. Democracy is a system of government in which people rule directly or indirectly through their elected representatives

Democracy is a government by the people in which supreme power is vested in the people and is exercised directly or indirectly by their representatives. Democracy is a people-centred system in which the people are the heart, root, and fruit.

Statesmen like Abraham Lincoln (former US president) defined democracy as “government of the people, by the people, and for the people”. In this case, government of the people represents the source of legitimacy, as government officials are elected solely by the people, whereas government by the people implies public participation in the government process and self-government. That is referred to as popular self-government. Government for the people refers to the idea that government officials should act in the best interests of the people.

case study

Imagine that in your class there are 35 students. It is very essential for every class to have representatives that represents each respective grade level. Therefore, like other grade level you have to have representatives for your class as well. Now it is time to nominate at least three students from your class. While you nominate make sure that both male and female students are nominated for class representatives. It is good to have at least two representatives' one male and one female. Why the need to have two representatives? Having two representatives is very important because if one representative is not available in the class because of various reasons the second (vice) representative will replace his/her role. Imagine that these two representatives were elected with the participation of all those 35 students. The process was free and fair because no one intervenes in the election. As all students are involved in the election with free and fair process it is possible to conclude that this is one example of democracy.

- Some argue that democracy is not built overnight, but rather over time. Why is this so?

3.2. The Origin of Democracy

3.2.1. Athenian Democracy

- Do you know the birth place or origin of democracy?

Democracy is thought to have begun in the 5th century B.C. in the Greek city-state of “Athens.” When we speak of Greek democracy, we are referring to Athenian democracy. This is not because Athens was the only Greek city-state to have a democratic form of government; rather, Athens was the most prominent and powerful.

In Athens, every (male adult) citizen could vote in the Assembly on the city’s most important issues. Thus, democracy was direct in its Greek origins, in that citizens voted directly and personally in the Assembly. Athenian democracy, in general, contained several elements to which we can still relate today. Among these are:

- Direct popular participation
- Political equality (at least for free adult male citizens)
- The notion that government should be responsible to the people
- It invented the idea of citizens, as opposed to subjects

The Athenian democracy, on the other hand, had fatal and serious limitations. Among the flaws are the following.

- Undemocratic in modern senses: In that only a small proportion of Athens’ adult population was eligible to vote.
- Citizenship was restricted to small elite: Citizenship was granted at birth to males whose parents were both Athenians. The vast majority of adults, including women, slaves, and residents aliens, did not qualify for citizenship.

- Participation was not in practice as extensive as the Athenians liked to claim: Even after payment for attendance was introduced, most citizens remained absent from most assemblies/meetings.
- Athenian democracy was hardly an exercise in lean movement: It was complicated, time-consuming, and costly: an overly complicated method of governing a small, rural society. Its relevance in the modern world is limited, as people prefer to spend their working hours developing and prospering themselves rather than attending political meetings.
- The principle of self-government did not always lead to decisive and coherent state policy: The lack of a permanent bureaucracy eventually contributed to a period of infected government following war defeat.

It is important to remember that while Athens is widely regarded as the birthplace of democracy, this does not imply that Athens was entirely democratic. As previously stated, the majority of Athenians were not permitted to participate in their government, and slavery was widespread. For example, one of the fundamental principles of democracy is that all citizens of a state participate in their government, and all citizens of a nation should not be subjected to slavery. All Ethiopian citizens have the democratic right to participate in their local and national governments without discrimination. No Ethiopian citizen should be subjected to slavery. Slavery is simply a condition in which a person is exploited and deprived of most democratic rights, such as the right to vote and be elected. While Athenian democracy was far from perfect, it served as a foundation for the development of modern democracy because these two beliefs continue to influence us today.

Athens is the birth place/origin of democracy.

3.3. Forms of Democracy

- What exactly is liberal democracy?
- Can you talk about the fundamental characteristics of social democracy?
- What is the difference between economic democracy and developmental democracy?

3.3.1 Liberal Democracy

Based on the participation of governments in the area of economic and political affairs, democracy has various forms. Liberal democracy is a type of democracy that discourages government intervention in a society's economic affairs. The role of the government in the economic spheres of people's lives is very minimal, whereas that of economic forces such as market forces is regarded as maximal (given supreme place). This type of democracy, in other words, is based on a free market economy. This implies that the state's role is limited to maintaining order and providing a bare minimum of general and coordinating regulations. The state creates a framework within which these economic forces can play their own role of balancing opposing forces. From this, one can deduce that the central idea of liberal democracy is individual political and legal equality, but not economic equality. Individual economic equality has nothing to do with liberal democracy, which is concerned with political liberty and legal equality. From this vantage point, it is sometimes referred to as capitalist democracy, which is practiced by the majority of Western countries.

Liberal democracy is a type of democracy whereby government that adopt such type of democracy usually do not intervene in the economic and social sectors. Governments that practice such democracy encourages private sector and free market system.

3.3.2 Social Democracy

Governments that advance social democracy give more priority for economic and social affairs. Social democracy's goal is to achieve equality and a classless society through reform under the guise of capitalism. In this case, it acknowledges that an individual's background, abilities, efforts, and so on shape his or her way of life. As a result, this is to ensure that everyone has the opportunity to fully utilize his or her abilities. To put it another way, social democracy advocates for social justice and economic empowerment for the poor. To that end, it is concerned with the provision of social security, housing, free education, health and medical care, and other similar services.

Social democracy is a type of democracy whereby governments that adopt such democracy usually intervene in the economic and social affairs.

3.1. Ways of Exercising Democracy

- What is direct democracy?
- What is indirect democracy?

Based on the participation of citizens in the democratic process, there are two ways of exercising democracy i.e. direct (pure) and indirect (representative) democracy.

3.1.1. Direct Democracy

- Is it possible to implement direct democracy in each and every political ?

Direct democracy (pure democracy) is a form of democracy in which “all adult citizens” can participate in decision-making without the intervention of elected officials. This belief is based on every citizen over a certain age having the right to attend political meetings, vote on the issue being discussed, and accept the majority decision if such a vote results in a law being passed that you as an individual did not support. Part of this belief is that everyone has the right to run for political office if they so desire. For example, in class, you may directly elect your class representative; this is possibly one form of direct democracy.

The difficulties associated with direct democracy are well known. When a nation’s people are unable to gather to make decisions, direct forms of democracy are incapable of replacing representation. However, there are some areas where they can supplement democracy. Direct democracy can be implemented through local committees, schools, and citizen associations, where it can be discussed and voted on collectively. This is not possible, however, with more complex and general issues.

The referendum is a procedure that most constitutions envision for direct consultation of all citizens. The practice of holding referendum on specific points should be used frequently and precisely defined. Local, regional, and national referendums could all be held.

Role play

Assume that the residents (local people) in your neighbourhood are voting on statehood (to promote from the status of zonal to regional level). In Ethiopia, everyone has the right to vote in a referendum as long as they meet the criteria set by the National Electoral Board of Ethiopia. Assume that you, as a citizen, are also voting in the referendum, and that some of you are voting for zonal status, while the rest of you are voting for regional status. It is now time for you to vote for or against statehood. When you are done with the voting, your teacher will count your ballots. Finally, your teacher will announce the referendum results. Dear student, your participation in this referendum process is one example of direct democracy.

3.1.2. Indirect (Representative) Democracy

- Why indirect democracy is more preferable than direct democracy in the modern times?

This is the type of modern democracy that we have today. A representative democracy is one in which citizens of a country elect representatives to make decisions on their behalf.

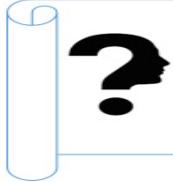

Figure 3.3 HPR in Ethiopia passing a decision in the parliament on behalf of the people.

In this regard, the meaning of the representative form of democracy is that the entire people cannot directly participate in their own affairs but must do so through their representatives, who are elected by the people themselves on a regular basis. In Ethiopia, for example, every five years, the people have the opportunity to elect those they want to represent them in the Parliament. Parliamentarians meet in the House of People Representatives to discuss issues and pass bills that become Ethiopian law. Each elected Parliamentarian in the House of People's Representatives represents all citizens. The responsibility of participating in lawmaking was delegated to Parliamentarians by the voters. In this case, leaders must maintain some level of contact with voters in order to remain in power. However, if they fail to perform (or if the party performs poorly during its tenure), the people have the power to remove them. The people exercise control over their representatives in this manner.

Citizens in a direct democracy make decisions directly by proposing laws or referendums. An indirect democracy, on the other hand, relies on a small group of officials to make important decisions on behalf of their constituents.

3.4 Procedural and Substantive Democracy

- What is the main difference between procedural democracy and substantive democracy?

There are two approaches to understanding democracy: substantive and procedural. The procedural viewpoint emphasizes the form and process of government, or how the people govern themselves. The principles of procedural democracy are universal participation, political equality, and majority rule. In a nutshell, procedural democracy is a form of democracy in which the people or citizens of the state have less influence than in traditional liberal democracies. This type of democracy is distinguished by voters' choice of representatives in free elections. Procedural democracy assumes that the electoral process is central to the authority placed on elected officials and ensures that all election procedures are followed. In Ethiopia, for example, elections are held on a regular basis in the majority of cases; thus, the electoral process is a fundamental manifestation of procedural democracy. Although a country may allow all citizens of voting age to vote, this does not automatically qualify it as a substantive democracy. To be able to claim substantive democracy, the election should also result in practical changes for the Ethiopian people (political equality, economic prosperity and others).

Procedural democracy focuses on how government decisions are made (process).

The substantive viewpoint focuses on what a government actually does, that is, the policies it implements should be consistent with democratic ideals. Substantive democracy is a type of democracy in which the results of elections are considered to be representative of the people. In other words, substantive democracy is a type of democracy that serves the interests of those who govern. Even if a country allows all citizens of voting age to vote, this does not automatically qualify it as a substantive democracy.

In a substantive democracy, the general population has a real say in how the state conducts its political affairs, i.e., the state is not only set up as a democracy, but it also functions as one. This type of democracy is also known as functional democracy. Substantive democracy focuses on the actual practice and role of governments.

Substantive democracy focuses on the results (outcomes) of government's decision.

3.5 Indigenous Democratic Practices

There is no doubt that indigenous traditional institutions and governance systems existed and continue to exist in Africa, including Ethiopia, prior to the birth of modern African states and the introduction of a multi-party political system. In most African countries, including Ethiopia, indigenous institutions of governance coexist informally with modern governance systems. Africans believe that traditional African governance systems are relevant to modern governance. Africans' beliefs about the role of indigenous governance and practice are based on the assumption that it is possible to accommodate African indigenous systems of governance that converge to democratic values rather than pushing them to the margins.

This implies that traditional governance systems, in addition to modern democratic systems, can contribute to the democratization process. Despite the fact that successive Ethiopian governments have introduced and implemented modern governance systems, indigenous institutions have played an indispensable role in guiding the social-political lives of societies, particularly in rural areas, by filling the gap left by formal state institutions and apparatus. Ethiopia is a notable country in terms of civilization, history, and culture. This wealth includes democratic traditions that date back to time immemorial in various Ethiopian societies. The fundamental democratic principles of open debate, consensus, and participation in agenda setting and decision making have been practiced as customary cultures at the local level in various Ethiopian societies.

Gada is one of the indigenous systems of governance used by the Oromo people of Ethiopia, which was developed through community experience over generations. The system governs the community's political, economic, social, and religious activities, addressing issues such as conflict resolution and reparation, among others. It functions as a mechanism for social cohesion and the expression of forms of community culture. Several indigenous conflict resolution mechanisms are also deeply rooted in Ethiopia's various ethnic groups. They are associated with people's cultural norms and values, and their legitimacy is derived from community values rather than state values.

Shimigilina used by the Amhara people, Yejoka in Gurage, Deira-Cimma in Wolayata, Enashma in Benisahngul-Gumuz, Baito in Tigray, Mada'a in Afar, Xeer in Somalis, and other indigenous practices are clearly visible. These various forms of indigenous conflict resolution practices that are being practiced in different areas of our country Ethiopia are very helpful in addressing disagreements that arise as a result of divergent interests. The fact that there are formal institutions such as courts that are being functional in Ethiopia, the above indigenous practices have so many contributions by addressing various issues.

Summary

The term democracy is derived from two Greek words (demos and kratos); simply put, these two words mean “rule of the people.” Democracy is thought to have begun in the city-states of Athens. Democracy is a form of government in which the people have ultimate political power. Citizens of a given state have two options for exercising democracy. Democracy can be exercised directly by involving all adult citizens of the state. Citizens in a direct democracy have a direct engagement and say in all political matters and decisions. People in a given state can also exercise their right to vote and participate directly in referendums.

Nowadays, due to various factors such as population size, topography, resources, time, and many other considerations, direct democracy is not preferred; instead, indirect (representative) democracy has become one of the most common ways for many nations and their citizens to exercise democracy. In a representative (indirect) democracy, the people of a given state elect their representatives, who are then expected to act on their behalf. It is critical to recognize that democratization is a process. Building democracy takes time, but different actors must also work together to build democracy and democratic culture. Political parties, the media, public opinion, and civil society all play a role in the democratization process. Democracies come in a variety of flavours, including liberal, social, economic, and developmental. There are two approaches to understanding democracy: The substantive view focuses on what a government does, whereas the procedural view emphasizes the form and process of government. Along with the modern democratic system, traditional governance systems contribute to the democratization process.

Review Questions

Part I: Write TRUE if the statement is correct and FALSE if it is wrong

UNIT 4

RULE OF LAW

Introduction

You learned about democracy in unit three. The rule of law is a fundamental principle of democracy. In a democratic state, the government is responsible for maintaining peace and order as well as protecting citizens' rights and freedoms. However, this is only possible when the rule of law prevails. This unit clarifies the concept of the rule of law in general, as well as its meaning, source, importance, and manifestations in particular. You will also learn about the difference between the rule of law and the rule of man. Finally, you learn about factors that influence the rule of law.

Unit Outcomes

At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

- Describe the concept of rule of law
- Identify sources of law
- Value the importance of rule of law
- Identify the manifestations of respecting rule of law
- Explain the rule of law and rule of man
- Comprehend factors affecting rule of law

4.1. Define the Concept of Rule of Law

- What is rule of law?

laws are binding societal rules or regulations that we must all follow. Laws protect societal safety and citizens' rights from infringement by others, including individuals, organizations, and the government itself. The law governs much of what people do on a daily basis. Laws can inform us about our rights and responsibilities. It also tells us what will happen if we do not do what is expected of us.

In a broader sense, the rule of law means no one, rich or poor, ruler or ruled, etc., is above the law. At its most basic level, the rule of law means that absence of arbitrary power on the part of the government and equality before the law. According to the principles of equality before the law, no "legal" person is entitled to benefits that are not available to all, and no one is immune from legal penalties. As a result, all citizens are treated equally under the rule of law.

Rule of law ensure, equality before the law.

Assume

One day at school, students are playing different games during their break time, as usual. Among them, there were children who had been playing rope jump. However, among those students who are playing rope jump, two students fight against each other. The students who were playing with them were trying to solve the problem, but they failed. Meanwhile, a nearby teacher approached the students and attempted to calm them down. In doing so, he realized that one of the students involved in the fight was the son of the school principal. The teacher asked the two kids about why they get into fights. The reaction, though, comes from the other students who were playing with them, and they told the teacher that the problem was the fault of the school principal's son. They even complained to the teacher that the school principal's son always used force while playing with them. Despite the teacher knowing the guilty student was the principal's son, he reprimanded the innocent student and returned where he had been.

- What would you do if you were in the shoes of the innocent student?
- In your opinion is the action of the teacher is acceptable? Why or why not?
- Can you recall a time in your schooling when you were treated unequally? What were your reactions on that?

The idea of justice has also been linked to the concept of the rule of law. Most people think that the ultimate objective of law is to ensure that everyone is treated fairly. Justice is the concept of moral rightness and fairness, which comprises treating people with respect and ensuring that they receive what they are owed.

The concept of justice refers to moral rightness and fairness.

A law is considered unjust if it discriminates against citizens based on their gender, color, race, or status. Regardless of a person's status, laws should be enforced. Justice must be unbiased.

- What is the difference between equality and fairness?

case study

The teacher asked his students to make sure whether or not they had met the lesson's objectives while teaching in the classroom. In response to his inquiry, the majority of the kids in the class raised their hands. The teacher, as is customary, only allows two students to respond to the question. Students in the class are aware that this teacher exclusively gives opportunities to such students. Unfortunately, a student angered by the teacher's behavior came up that day and stated, "I have a question." The teacher, who is irritated by the student's behavior, tells the student that he can only ask questions if he is given permission to do so.

I may be wrong to stand up and ask you that I have a question, the irritated student said to the teacher. However, due to your unjust treatment of us, I am compelled to rise without your consent. We are all your pupils, and it is your responsibility to provide each of us an equal chance. However, you gave those two pupils the opportunity to participate in answering your question exclusively. As a result, I am here to politely remind you that we all need to participate in your class, and that you must give us an equal opportunity.

- In the aforementioned case, what action do you think can be taken, and who do you think should take it? Discuss.
- Do you believe the student's action is appropriate? Is there any way to express your issue in class?
- How do you demonstrate justice in your daily life?

4.1.1 Source of Law

- Where does Ethiopian law originate?

The sources of law are the origins of law or the binding rules of human conduct. The primary sources of law can be divided into four categories. They are as follows:

- i) Constitution A constitution is a power map containing a set of principles and rules outlining the structure and system of government, describing its institutions and the manner in which they work and relate to one another. The constitution also describes both the limits on governmental power and the rights of citizens. Thus, constitutions is the fundamental sources of law.

Constitutions is the fundamental sources of law.

- ii) Custom Custom is one of the oldest sources of law. Custom is defined as long-established practices or unwritten rules that have taken on a binding or obligatory character. Custom was used to settle and decide disputes between people. Customs were routinely observed, and violations of customs were punished by society. Social institutions also operate on the basis of a number of accepted customs. In fact, the majority of State laws were born when they began converting customs into authoritative and binding rules. Custom has been a rich source of law in the past

- Explain what the boy is doing in the above image. Would you do the same if you were him?
- Obviously in our culture, different customs exist, and disobeying those customs will result in social discrimination. Can you share some of the local customs with your partner and have a discussion about them

- iii) Religion and Morality Religion and religious rules emerged naturally in every society as humans began to observe, enjoy, and fear natural forces. As a result, religious codes were accepted as superior heavenly forces and began to regulate people's behavior. Several religions stepped forward to prescribe specific codes of conduct that individuals were obligated to adopt and follow.

Moral rules appeared in society as well. Morality was defined as what is good and bad, what is right and wrong. A society's religious and moral codes provided the State with the necessary material for regulating people's actions. The state enacted several moral and religious standards as laws. As a result, religion and morality have been important sources of law.

- Look at the above picture and tell your partner what you understand. Is the action of the students and the teacher right or wrong? Talk to your partners about it.
- What, in your opinion, is the teacher's responsibility in such a situation? What should you do if the teacher refuses to intervene?

iv) Legislation Traditionally, the State relied on customs and the King's decrees or orders to regulate the behavior of the people. Later, the legislative branch was established as the government's governing organ. The act of enacting new laws in any form is referred to as legislation. Legislation encompasses all expressions of the legislature's will. The legislatures began to transform the people's customary rules of behavior into definite and enacted rules of behavior. Soon after, legislation was designated as the State's law-making organ, and legislation became the primary source of law.

The legislature is the primary source of law.

A student code of conduct is an example of a set of guidelines provided to you at the start of the school year. The student, teacher, and administrative policies and procedures are outlined in the school code of conduct. You may also have specific classroom rules and regulations, such as the ones listed below:

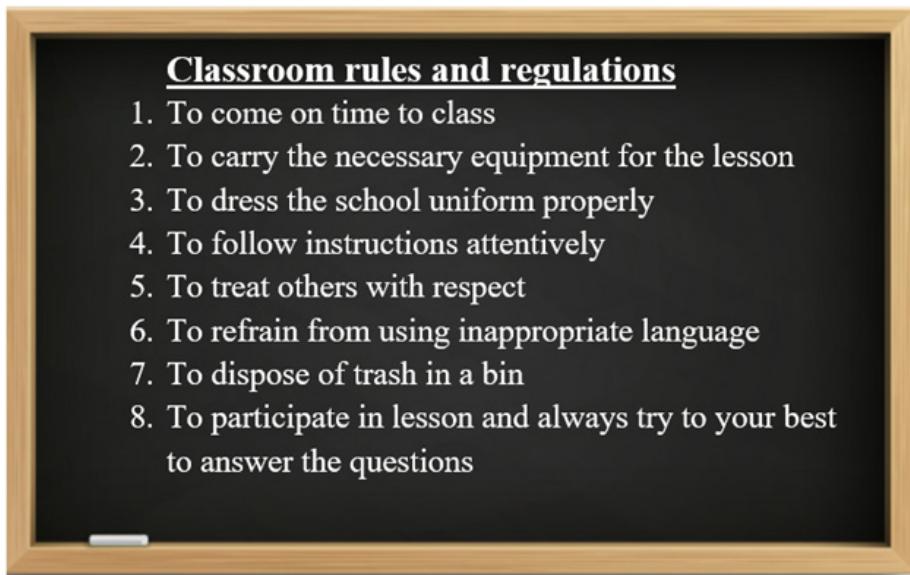

Figure 4.4 classroom rules and regulations

Get into small groups and share your ideas with your close partners based on the above classroom rules and regulations:

- What is the purpose of having rules in the classroom?
- Does this law give you or another student more power, or does it take away your power? Why do you believe this?
- What would it be like in your classroom if students did not follow the rules?
- Consider how your classroom would be different if the teacher did not have the authority to tell anyone what to do

4.2. The Importance of Rule of Law

- Why is the rule of law important for society?

Zeberega and Tinkuk

Tinkuk and Zeberega are married couples who have been together for many years. On his way to school one day, their son Zafu missed his bus. As a result, the two couples decided to drive their son to school themselves. They arrive at a traffic light with crossroads while driving. Unfortunately, the red light was turned on when they arrived. However, Zafu's father, Zeberga, noticed that there were no traffic officers in the area and decided to cross the road while the red light was on. Tinkuk, his wife, is sitting next to him and is well aware that her husband is planning to cross the road illegally.

As a result, she advised waiting patiently until the green light turned on. Her husband, Zeberga, explained to her that he couldn't wait for the green light to turn green because he needed to cross the street right away.

- Do we only obey the law when there is a law enforcement officer?
- What if Zeberga crossed the street while the red light was on?
- What do you understand from Zeberga's urgency and his wife's carefulness?
- What would society be like if people were not required to follow the law?

The rule of law benefits not only the government in power, but also the general public. The rule of law works because most people agree that it is important to follow the law, even if there is no one to enforce it. Some of the reasons why the rule of law is so important are as follows:

- A) Promotes Democracy

- Do you believe that the rule of law is a prerequisite for democratic government or that democracy is a prerequisite for the rule of law?

The rule of law is essential to democracy because it establishes the foundation for certain conditions upon which democracy is based. According to the principles of rule of law, every citizen is equal before the law, regardless of his/her religion, ethnicity, language, color or gender, and is held accountable to the system in accordance with the rules. This is a fundamental characteristic of democracy. Therefore, rule of law is regarded as essential requirement for the existence of democratic government.

The rule of law is a precondition for the existence of democratic government.

- B) Promotes the freedom of the judiciary

- In your opinion, what is the significance of judicial independence?
- What role does the rule of law have in judicial independence?

One of the benefits of the rule of law is the assurance of judicial independence. This means that when the rule of law is applied in its purest form, the judiciary's independence is enhanced and they can work independently of other forces. As a result, if the judicial system is independent, judges will be able to make decisions only in accordance with the law, with no outside influences.

- C) Enhances the freedom of the individual

- What do you think is the link between the rule of law and individual freedom?

Governments are expected to allow the expression of opposing viewpoints in society where the rule of law is in place. The government is also expected to protect media freedom, which includes radio, television, newspapers, and social media. In the absence of the rule of law, no one has the right to speak, and no one has the right to publish differing viewpoints.

- What do you understand from the above picture?

- D)Prevents arbitrariness and dictatorship

Citizens become acutely aware of their rights and liberties when the rule of law is properly implemented. This enables them to ascertain whether their rights are being violated. It also aids them in checking the arbitrariness of government appointees and the rise of dictatorship. Authoritarian regimes prefer to use force rather than respond to popular demand in countries where the rule of law does not exist. Fear and intimidation are used by dictators to rule their countries and people. As a result, citizens of a dictatorship take to the streets to demonstrate

4.3. The Manifestations of Respecting Rule of Law

- How can you tell if you are following the rule of law or not? Could you please give me a list of some of the manifestations?

A. Independence of the judiciary

It is extremely difficult for the state to maintain the rule of law when citizens do not respect the law. The rule of law works because most people believe that obeying the law is important. The existence of judicial independence is one manifestation of respect for the rule of law. Judicial independence means that when making decisions, judges are free of political pressures and influences. Maintaining the rule of law necessitates the existence of an independent judiciary. Judges should not be influenced by a political party, a private interest, or popular opinion when determining what the law requires. As a result, the independence of the judiciary is a manifestation of respect for the rule of law.

Respect for the rule of law manifests itself in the independence of the judiciary.

B. Equal application of laws

Another manifestation of respect for the rule of law is the absence of arbitrary power. The rule of law requires the legal system to produce predictable results. Predictable outcomes imply that those who behave similarly can anticipate the law treating them similarly. People cannot use the law to guide their actions if similar actions do not produce comparable legal outcomes. Individuals can have rights in a country where the rule of law exists, citizens understand the law and can avoid breaking it, and no one is permitted to engage in illegal activities.

Furthermore, all people are presumed innocent until proven guilty by a court, no one can be arbitrarily detained, imprisoned, or deprived of their property, punishment must be determined by a court and be proportionate to the offence, and the supremacy of law must be followed.

- What do we call someone who is in the criminal justice system but has not yet been convicted of a crime?

Respect for the rule of law is also demonstrated by the equal application of the law. According to the rule of law, no one, whether a president or a private citizen, is above the law. Everyone, rich or poor, ethnic majority or religious minority, state political ally or peaceful opponent, must obey the laws.

One of the most important manifestations of the rule of law is the equal application of laws.

- C. Prevalence of Peace and Order

Respect for the rule of law is also reflected in the country's high level of security and order. People place a high value on their personal safety. When there is a crime, citizens may lose faith in the government. In the worst-case scenario, people may decide to take the law into their own hands.

- D. Separation of Power

In countries where the rule of law exists, there is a separation of government powers. Separation of powers creates the necessary checks and balances to keep government from spiraling out of control.

Regional and local governments, when properly functioning, can provide a counterbalance to the central government. In order for checks and balances to work, all branches of government must function properly. As a result, separation of powers and checks and balances are seen as important manifestations of the rule of law.

Figure 4.7 that indicate separation of power among the three branches

Separation of powers and checks and balances are regarded as important manifestations of the rule of law.

- What do you think is the importance of government separation of power?
- What will happen if there is no check and balance in government power?

4.4. Rule of Law and Rule of Man

- You have probably heard the terms “Rule of Law” and “Rule of Man,” but do you understand what they mean and how they differ?

In a democratic society, the rule of law differs from the rule of man in more authoritarian cultures. For much of human history, rulers and law were interchangeable; laws were simply the ruler’s will. Individuals were imprisoned, had their property seized, tortured, exiled, and executed in the name of the state, often without formal legal charges being brought against them. The use of law as a tool of political power is referred to as the ‘rule of man.’ It means that while the state uses the law to govern its citizens, it never allows the law to govern the state. In man’s rule, one person or a group of people rules arbitrarily. The monarch (King/Queen) has unlimited power and is not bound by any law; as a person, he/she exists outside of the rule of law.

The rule of law opposes to the rule of man. The concept of the rule of law holds that even a ruler is subject to the law and must rule through legal means. The rule of law is intended to elevate the rule of law above political considerations. Rule of law refers to any law enacted by the supreme lawmaking authority of the land. It represents the supremacy of the rule of law over the will of the individual. The concept of the rule of law holds that everyone is subject to the law and that no one is above it.

The following are the basic principles of the rule of law:

1. The law applies to both the government and the governed.
2. Rulers and ruled are treated equally before the law, regardless of individual social rank.
3. No one shall be wrongfully punished until he has received due process of law, or a normal trial in a court of law.
4. An accused person is presumed innocent until a court of law finds him guilty.
5. An accused person must be able to appeal a decision that he or she believes is incorrect.
6. The government must rule in accordance with the provisions of the constitution.
7. Individual beliefs or actions must not infringe on the fundamental rights guaranteed by the constitution. The law’s foundation and application must be reasonable.

Form a group and discuss on the following questions:

- What would happen in your locality if there is no rule of law?
- Write the manifestations that shows absence of rule of law in your school?

4.5. Factors Affecting Rule of Law

- What impact does the rule of law have on Ethiopian government officials and institutions?

Recall that the rule of law is one of the most important aspects of modern democratic societies. The rule states that the law is supreme and that no one has authority over the law. The rule of law affects all of us, regardless of whom we are or where we live. Government leaders and groups, in particular, are influenced by the rule of law in a variety of ways. Some of the factors that may influence the proper application of the rule of law are as follows:

- i) Corruption

Corruption is defined as the use of government authority or responsibility for personal gain. Corruption is a major impediment to the proper application of the rule of law. When the majority of those in power are uninterested in combating corruption, the rule of law cannot be applied. Thus, corruption is unquestionably one of the factors influencing the proper application of the rule of law. In order to eliminate corruption and malpractice, it is imperative to eliminate rent-seeking attitudes and create a society that hates unethical practices.

Corruption is a major impediment to the proper application of the rule of law.

- ii) Illiteracy

Many people are unaware that they have the legal right to criticize and sue the current government for breaking the law. As a result, the proper application of the rule of law may be jeopardized. As a result, it is clear that illiteracy can have an impact on the rule of law because a lack of awareness causes citizens to remain silent when the government acts above the law.

- iii) Poor Leadership

Poor leaders despise the rule of law because it limits their ability to use their power for personal gain. Poor leaders are only concerned with their own personal interests and goals, allowing the people to be oppressed. As a result, poor leadership is another factor impeding the proper application of the rule of law.

- iv) Lack of patriotism

One of the factors affecting the rule of law is a lack of patriotism. Every citizen who is not patriotic wishes to break the law for personal gain. This means that such a citizen wishes to profit from the government's corrupt practices. As a result, in order to build a country free of poverty and corruption, every patriotic citizen must fight corruption and malpractice, which are threats to the rule of law.

One of the factors affecting the rule of law is a lack of patriotism.

These are the primary factors that may have an impact on the rule of law in general. Even if the rule of law principle is officially stated in the constitution, it is usually impossible to see practice where any of the above points is prevalent. As a result, certain characteristics, such as an independent court, responsible leadership, patriotism, and widespread literacy, are required for the rule of law principles to function properly.

Unit Summary

The rule of law is a fundamental principle of democracy. Democracy is a legal system that governs rather than individuals. Equality before the law is ensured by the rule of law. According to the concept of equality before the law, no “legal” person is entitled to benefits that are not available to all. As a result, all citizens are treated equally under the rule of law. The primary sources of law can be divided into four categories. Constitution, custom, religion and morality, and legislation are examples of these. The rule of law works because most people agree that it is important to follow the law, even if there is no one to enforce it.

Citizens become acutely aware of their rights and liberties when the rule of law is properly implemented. The rule of law works because most people believe that obeying the law is important. Respect for the rule of law is also demonstrated by the equal application of the law.

In a democratic society, the rule of law differs from the rule of man in more authoritarian cultures. For much of human history, rulers and law were interchangeable; laws were simply the ruler’s will. The concept of rule of law was a first step away from such tyranny. The rule of law affects government leaders and groups in a variety of ways. Corruption, illiteracy, poor leadership, and a lack of patriotism are some of the factors that may interfere with the proper application of the rule of law. As a result, certain characteristics, such as an independent court, responsible leadership, patriotism, and widespread literacy, are required for the rule of law principles to function properly.

Unit Review Question

Part I: Write “TRUE” if the statement is correct and “FALSE” if the statement is incorrect.

- 1) All citizens are treated unequally under the rule of law.
- 2) According to the concept of rule of law, both the governor and the governed are subject to the same laws.
- 3) The supreme law of the land in a democratic country is commonly referred to as a constitution.
- 4) Custom is one of the oldest sources of law.
- 5) The presence of arbitrary power is one of the signs of respect for the rule of law

Part III: Each of the questions or statements below is followed by four possible responses or completions. In each case, choose the CORRECT option.

- 1) One of the following statements is NOT TRUE about the importance of rule of law?
  - A)It is a precondition for the existence of democratic government
  - B)It help the judiciary's to work without interference from other forces
  - C)No one has the right to speak and write its own opinions
  - D)Citizens of the country live in dignity and equality
- 2) Respecting rule of law also manifested through.....?
  - A)the prevalence of security and order
  - B)the equal application of the law
  - C)an independent judiciary
  - D)all of the above
- 3) Which of the following is NOT a factor influencing the rule of law?
  - A)Corruption
  - B)Illiteracy
  - C)Poor leadership
  - D)Patriotism

Part IV: Write the appropriate answer for the following questions.

- 1) What does it mean to say Ethiopia is a country of laws rather than men?
- 2) What is the connection between the rule of law and democracy?

Human Rights

HUMAN RIGHTS

Introduction

This is unit five of the textbook. This unit is entirely dedicated to the fundamental concept of human rights and its related aspects. Human rights are defined in this unit as the birth rights of all people, regardless of race, gender, sexual orientation, political ideology, or other factors. As a result, this section briefly addresses the importance of human rights implementation. The unit also discussed how, while states have the primary responsibility to protect human rights, the international community has a moral obligation to do so if states fail to do so. Finally, the unit discusses human rights instruments and the role of governments in implementing human rights.

Unit Outcomes

At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

- Define the concept of human right;
- Explain the importance of respecting human rights;
- Demonstrate their moral responsibilities in their communities;
- List down institutions of human rights in Ethiopia.

5.1 The Concept of Human Rights

- What do you know about human rights?
- What are human rights, and where do they originate? To whom can I assert these natural rights? Could you provide some examples?

Human rights are commonly understood to be fundamental rights to which a person is naturally entitled simply by virtue of being human. They are rights that come with the territory of being human. Human rights are based on the belief that every human being is entitled to exercise his or her rights without discrimination.

It is important to note that these are fundamental rights and liberties that all people in the world have from birth to death. They are applicable regardless of where you are from, what you believe, or how you live your life. Human rights are defined as values that reflect respect for human life and dignity.

Examples of human rights include:

- The right to life
- The right to liberty
- The right to equality
- Freedom of movement
- Right to privacy
- Freedom of religion
- Freedom of opinion

Human rights are the fundamental rights and liberties that every person in the world has from birth to death.

5.2 Features of Human Rights

- Are human rights accepted universally?

Human rights, which are human birth rights, are manifested by the following distinguishing characteristics.

① Human Rights are universal Human rights are rights that we have simply by virtue of our existence as humans. These universal rights are passed down to all of us, regardless of race, color, gender, ethnic or social origin, religion, language, nationality, age, sexual orientation, disability, or any other distinguishing feature. The universality of their nature necessitates their respect and protection in all places and at all times. They apply equally and indiscriminately to everyone and are the same for everyone everywhere because they are accepted by all states and peoples. It is critical to remember that human rights apply to everyone on the planet, regardless of race or ethnicity.

① Human Rights are Inherent:- Human rights are inherent because they are not bestowed upon anyone or any authority. Human rights do not have to be purchased, earned, or inherited; they are ours simply because we are human. It's based on human dignity. They are symbols of human dignity. They are inherent in every human being's dignity. For example, can we buy freedom of speech or can the government grant it to us? No, because it is a natural right for all of us, we cannot purchase it.

① Human Rights are Inalienable:- Human rights are absolute and unalienable. Nobody can deprive anyone of these rights, and nobody can give up these rights by himself/herself. They should not be taken away unless there are specific circumstances and due process is followed. For example, if a person is found guilty of a crime by a court of law, his or her right to liberty may be restricted.

① Human Rights are Indivisible and Interdependence:- Human rights are inseparable and interconnected. Because each human right is dependent on the exercise of other human rights, violating one of these rights has an impact on the exercise of other human rights. The concept of indivisibility and interdependence simply means that all human rights are extremely important for everyone. When one right is violated, it affects all other rights. This means that one set of rights cannot be fully exercised in the absence of the other. The right to life, for example, presupposes respect for the right to food and an adequate standard of living. A person's access to justice and participation in public life may be hampered if their right to basic education is denied.

Human rights are distinguished by their universality, inalienability, inherency, and interdependence.

Activity 1

1. Form a group and discuss the fundamental characteristics of human rights using concrete examples from your own experience as a human?

5.3 The Importance of Respecting Human Rights

- Why is respecting human rights in Ethiopia so critical to our country?

It is critical for every nation, including Ethiopia, to put human rights ideas into action in order to create the kind of society we want to live in.

Human rights play an important role in how people interact with others at all levels of society, including the family, community, schools, workplace, politics, and international relations. Therefore, respecting human rights is very important in Ethiopia because it:

- ⌚ is helpful to ensure democracy, justice and growth;
- ⌚ is a prerequisite to sustainable peace and development;
- ⌚ promotes democratization process;
- ⌚ ensures people to have basic needs;
- ⌚ protects vulnerable groups from abuse like women, children, etc;
- ⌚ gives people the freedom to protect practice their religion;
- ⌚ Encourages equal work opportunities;
- ⌚ gives people access to education;
- ⌚ provides a universal standards that holds governments accountable.

As previously stated, the right to equality and non-discrimination are two examples of human rights. Do you believe that sustainable peace can be achieved in Ethiopia if citizens are not treated equally and are discriminated against based on ethnicity? The answer is no, because achieving sustainable peace and development is unthinkable if citizens are not treated equally and discriminatory practices exist.

Human rights must be respected in order to ensure democracy, justice, and growth.

5.4 Moral Responsibilities in Protecting Human Rights

- Do you think the international community has the moral responsibility to protect human rights?

For a long time, human rights were considered an internal matter of a country, which meant that other states and the international community were barred from interfering, even in the most serious cases of human rights violations, such as genocide. Over time, this approach gave way to a responsibility to protect the principle. Members of the United Nations (heads of state and governments) unanimously approved the principles underlying the Responsibility to Protect on September 16, 2005. (R2P).

This principle emphasizes that it is the responsibility of each individual state to protect its citizens from genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing, and crimes against humanity.

Activity 2

1. Who has a primary responsibility to protect human rights?

According to this principle, Ethiopia, as a member of the UN, has the responsibility to protect its people from grave circumstances such as genocide (genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity). It is critical to remember that when it comes to human rights protection, every state in the world bears equal responsibility. However, if a state fails to protect its people from grave dangers, the international community has a moral obligation to step in. The international community must take “collective action” through the Security Council “in a timely and decisive manner.”

The international community has a moral obligation to protect the community from heinous acts such as genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity.

5.5 Instruments of Human rights

- Do you know any human rights instrument?

Treaties, declarations, conventions, protocols, and other texts that serve as legal sources for human rights law and the protection of human rights in general are referred to as instruments of human rights. Human rights instruments can be adopted by a variety of bodies ranging from the global to the national level. There are global (international) human rights instruments, regional (continental) human rights instruments, and national (state) human rights instruments, to name a few.

Activity 3

1. Can you name one international human rights treaty?
2. Can you mention one African continental human rights instrument?
3. Do you know of any Ethiopian national human rights instruments

Several states usually sign international human rights treaties. In other words, when such an instrument is declared, many states participate and agree. For example, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) is one of the most important international human rights instruments in human rights history. It serves as a common achievement standard for all peoples and nations. As an international human rights instrument, the UDHR contains 30 articles.

One example of an international human rights instrument is the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR).

Regional human rights instruments are becoming increasingly important in the promotion and protection of human rights at the regional level. Regional human rights instruments (e.g., treaties, conventions, declarations) aid in the localization of international human rights norms and standards, reflecting the region's specific human rights concerns.

The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, adopted in 1981, is Africa's primary regional human rights instrument. The African Charter incorporates universal human rights standards and principles, as well as African traditions' virtues and values. As a regional human rights instrument, the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights contains nearly 68 articles.

Figure 5.4 African Heads of State and Government gathered at the African Union Head Quarter adopting African charter on human rights

One example of a regional human rights instrument is the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights.

The Ethiopian Human Rights Commission

Human rights and freedoms are enshrined in one-third of Ethiopia's 1995 Constitution. The fundamental rights and freedoms articulated in the Ethiopian constitution must be interpreted in accordance with the principles of all international human rights laws, instruments, and agreements that Ethiopia has signed. There are various mechanisms/institutions in Ethiopia that play a role in implementing national human rights instruments.

Ethiopian Human Rights Commission and the Ombudsman Institution are two examples of national human rights institutions that play a role in implementing human rights norms at the state level.

As an institution, the Ethiopian Human Rights Commission plays a role in implementing human rights norms.

5.6 The Roles of the Government in Realizing Human Rights

The governments of respective states bear the primary responsibility for respecting, protecting, and fulfilling human rights. Most countries have become signatories to the major human rights treaties in recent decades. When a state ratifies an international human rights treaty, it accepts the responsibility to respect, protect, and fulfill the rights enshrined in the treaty. Respect implies that the state cannot take any action or impose any measure that violates the rights guaranteed by the treaty.

- One example of human rights is freedom of expression. This implies that everyone has this right, i.e. freedom of expression. The right to free expression means that the government cannot prevent or punish a person from speaking.
  - Everyone has the right to religious freedom. Ethiopia is a melting pot of religions, including Christianity, Islam, Judaism, and many others. The right to religious freedom requires the government to leave individuals alone to believe and practice their religion in accordance with their consciences.

To protect means that the state must take proactive steps to ensure that an individual's human rights are not violated. For example, a person may be imprisoned for a crime; however, this prisoner should not be physically beaten or abused by anyone. The government must also protect its citizens' security from any type of attack, as terrorist groups such as al-Qa'ida in Iraq, al-Shabaab in Somalia, Boko Haram in Nigeria, and ISIS in many countries attack innocent people at various times.

The responsibility to fulfill necessitates that a state go beyond mere prevention. This could include anything from enacting laws to promoting human rights through national education and information campaigns. Human rights include, for example, the right to an education. If citizens are unable to achieve this basic right on their own, it is the government's responsibility to provide a free or low-cost education. It is important to note that human rights governance is complicated. As previously stated, human rights institutions in each state are expected to be critical components of a strong and effective national human rights protection system.

Summary

Human rights are those that are guaranteed to everyone, regardless of religion, language, gender, race, ethnicity, or other distinctions. Being human is the only criterion for claiming human rights. It is critical that every nation, including Ethiopia, put human rights ideas into practice in order to create the kind of society we want to live in. Implementing and respecting human rights empowers Ethiopian citizens and provides solutions to the problems that our country faces at various times as a result of violations of human rights. It is also critical to remember that respect for human rights is a prerequisite for long-term peace and development. Despite the fact that the international community has a moral obligation to protect human rights, states are the primary actors who must respect, protect, and fulfill human rights.

Review Questions

Part I: Write TRUE if the statement is correct and FALSE if it is wrong

1. Human rights are those rights that are natural to everyone.
2. It is the government that grants human rights to its citizens.
3. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) was declared in 1948.
4. One thirds of the 1995 FDRE constitution is devoted to human rights.
5. The 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) contains 30 articles.

Part II: Choose the correct answer from the given alternatives

1. Which one of the following is not a human right?
  - A. Political rights
  - B. Civil rights
  - C. Economic rights
  - D. None
2. Which one of the following is the feature of human rights?
  - A. Universality
  - B. Inherency
  - C. Equality
  - D. All
3. The applicability of human rights to all people everywhere at all times refers to
  - A. Equality
  - B. Universality
  - C. Inalienability
  - D. Interdependence
4. Identify the body that has the primary responsibility to protect human rights.
  - A. States
  - B. UN
  - C. AU
  - D. Amnesty International
5. Which one of the following is an international human rights instrument?
  - A. Uinversal Declaration of Human Rights
  - B. African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights
  - C. The FDRE constitution on human rights
  - D. All

ENGAGEMENT IN COMMUNITY AFFAIRS

Introduction

In unit five, you learned about fundamental concepts of human rights. As a result, you now have a better understanding on the importance of human rights, moral obligations in protecting human rights, human rights instruments, and the government's role in achieving human rights. In unit six, you will learn the fundamentals of engagement in community affairs. Hence, first we will look at the definitions and key concepts. Following that, we will talk the importance of community engagement and benefits of volunteering in the community. Finally, we will see the social, political and economic aspects of community engagement

Unit Outcomes

At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

- Explain the meaning of community engagement
- Describe the uses of community engagement
- List the benefits of voluntary service
- Explain aspects of community engagement
- Demonstrate the habits of community engagement

6.1. The Meaning of Community Engagement

- What does the word “community” mean to you?

The term community comes from the Latin word communis, which means “common” or “shared.” It may share a sense of place, whether in a physical location or in a virtual space. A geographical community is a group of people who live in the same geographical area, such as a village, province, or neighborhood. A non-geographic community is one formed by needs, ideas, interests, identity, practices, and roles in social institutions such as at home, work, government, society, or the community at large.

A community is a social unit (a group of living things) with commonality such as norms, religion, values, customs, or identity

Communication and relationships are essential for the development of a community. People form relationships as they communicate and interact with one another. Individuals who have a high level of interaction in a specific area become one of the components that contribute to the formation of a community. As you may be aware teachers, students, and administrative personnel are all present in your school compound. This implies that you are a member of your school’s community.

1. Can you think of any other community based on the definition above?

When we extend the scope, community engagement combines the terms ‘community’ and ‘engagement,’ shifting the emphasis from the individual to the collective. While there are nearly as many definitions as there are people attempting to define it, community engagement is based on the democratic principle that everyone affected by a community-wide issue should have a say in how decisions are made.

Community engagement is founded on the democratic principle that everyone who is affected by decisions should have a say in how those decisions are made.

Community engagement for governments and organizations entails working with and listening to communities in order to develop long-term relationships and meaningful solutions to complex issues. By deepening these relationships, the value of inclusivity, where government entities create dialogue with the very diversity of their communities, should be central.

1. So, what exactly is community engagement?

Community engagement is defined as the process of working with members of a community to address issues that affect their well-being. In reality, community engagement is a long-term process that requires practitioners, government officials, service providers, and members of the community to form partnerships. Hence, community engagement is a two-way process as opposed to information provision, which is a one-way flow of information from the government or other authority to the community. Citizens are said to be “engaged” when they participate actively in decision-making. For example, your school may use a variety of two-way communication methods with parents like:

- ① notes to parents,
- ① face-to-face meetings,
- ① home visits, and etc. to solicit parental input and feedback in your schooling.

1. In your opinion what do you think is the importance of community engagement in schools?

6.2. The Importance of Community Engagement

- What is the primary motives for individuals to engage in community affairs?
  - Can you mention the main purpose of community engagement?

It is widely acknowledged that without community engagement economic and social development efforts have little chance of success. That is, why citizens actively participate in defining issues, identifying solutions, and establishing action and resource priorities. Indeed, there are numerous reasons why community engagement is important, in this grade level, however, we will only look at some of them.

Making use of local knowledge

- With the help of your parents, identify a local knowledge or skill found in your community and analyze its relevance for the local community and beyond?

New local ideas and practices can be developed by properly engaging and soliciting the community's opinion. If the concerned body do that, people may feel as if they are an integral part of the process. Besides, solutions that rely on local knowledge from a diverse population are both practical and effective. It also increases the likelihood that projects or plans will be widely accepted. Our country, in this case, is rich in indigenous knowledge and skills such as hillside terracing and banding, shifting a barn from one farmland to another to fertilize the land, horn-works, building houses from stone, mud, and ash, producing and selling household furniture, metal works, traditional conflict resolution mechanisms, indigenous medicine, and so on. Thus, the application of such local knowledge and skills is one of the most important aspects of community engagement.

Building Trust

- Can you name one of the most effective ways for you and your parents to be informed about what the kebele or woreda officials are doing or planning to do?
- How does the community engagement help citizens to get information on what the government is doing?

Engagement in the community improves communication and understanding. It also informs participants about what local governments and community organizations are doing and are intended to do. This interactions boost trust between the local community and the government or non-governmental organizations. In today's world, it is commonly acknowledged that information can be obtained in a variety of ways. However, if the source of the information is not verified, trust between the parties may be eroded. For example, if your school is not up to date on what it is doing and what it intends to accomplish, misinformation is likely to spread. This problem can only be solved if the school administration and the community as a whole work together effectively.

Engagement in the community improves communication and understanding.

1. How do you confirm whether the information you have got is correct or not?
2. Do you have any prior experience with receiving incorrect information that was later detected? If yes, please share the story to the student next to you how you detect the information was incorrect?

Citizens Empowerment

Citizens are empowered through community engagement to take responsibility for the things that can happen in their own community. It also encourages citizens to address issues that are specific to their neighborhood or community. Marginalized groups can reclaim control of their lives and communities. As a result, one of the benefits of community engagement is that it empowers and unites people from all walks of life by providing a common platform for them to work toward common goals.

1. Is there any kind of marginalized group in your locality? If that's the case, how do you think community engagement can help to ensure inclusivity?

Problem Solving

In order to provide high-quality, efficient, and collaborative care in the community, meaningful community engagement is essential. Citizens' knowledge and problem-solving abilities improve as a result of community engagement. Participants gain a comprehensive understanding of the issues and have the opportunity to practice communication and decision-making skills. Thus, community engagement enables participants to improve their problem-solving abilities as well as their ability to examine an issue from various angles in order to find the best solution.

1. Think about the school you attend and list the problems you think the school has?
2. Is it possible to solve the problem that the school has? If your answer is possible, please explain to your teacher how? And if your answer is impossible, please explain to your teacher why not?
3. In your opinion, who is responsible for solving the problem that the school has?

1. What are your most important engagement values?
2. How will you make sure those values are reflected in the engagement process?
3. As a student what are you trying to do now?
4. If you decide to engage in community affairs, whom do you want to engage?

Importance of Community Engagement	Descriptions
Making use of local knowledge	Solutions that draw on local knowledge from a diverse group of population are practical and effective.
Building trust	Community engagement improves communication and understanding.
Citizens empowerment	Groups that feel marginalized can regain control of their lives and communities.
Problem solving	Improves citizens' knowledge and skills in problem solving.

6.3. The Benefits of Voluntary Service in the Community

- What is a voluntary service?

Figure 6.4 group of student participate in volunteering

Volunteering is the unpaid contribution of one's time, effort, and talent to a need, cause, or goal. Simply put, volunteering is a form of community service. It is distinct from required/mandated or contractual activity. Volunteering is a selfless act in which an individual or group provides services for no monetary compensation. Volunteering is the voluntary participation of a group of individuals from a community in social, charitable, and environmental activities.

A volunteer, on the other hand, is someone who does something for the benefit of others and does not expect anything in return. Volunteers make a unique contribution to their communities by utilizing a diverse set of skills, knowledge, and experience.

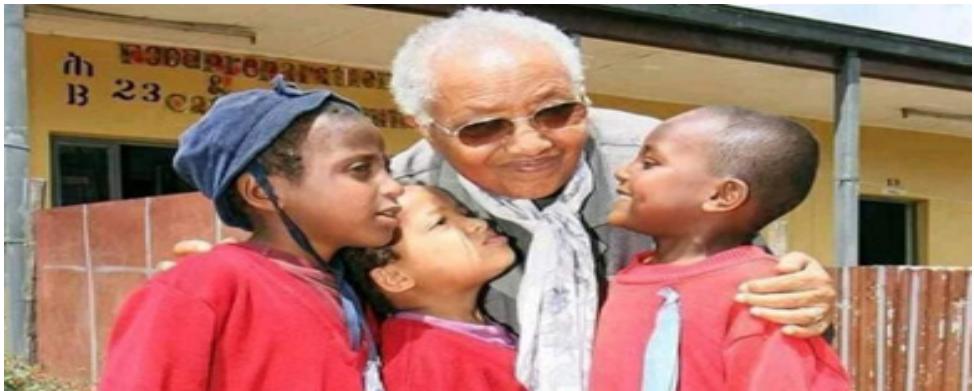

1. Is there a minimum age requirement for volunteering?

The goal of volunteering is to make a personal contribution to the greater good. Indeed, its very nature and essence are linked to the human need to serve others and advocate for social issues. It is a critical strategy for assisting individuals and communities in need.

1. Did you realize just how important volunteering could be for the person doing it?
2. Have you ever done any kind of volunteer work?

After reading the short story below, discuss it with the student next to you and respond to the questions that follow.

African Mother Theresa

Mother Teresa of Africa raised tens of thousands of orphaned children. In 1938, the selfless mother was born in the small town of Shebel. The loving mother, who had lost her father when she was a child, was forced to marry when she was eleven years old. She did not want to marry right now, so she fled to Addis Ababa. She established a good family and lived happily in Addis. The devoted mother went on a pilgrimage to Gishen Mariam, Wollo province, in 1972. Along the way, she came across two children who were dying as a result of the drought. She welcomed 21 children into her home in a single year, despite having only two children at the time. Rather than applauding her noble actions and supporting her efforts to save lives, her friends and family saw the danger she posed to them. As a result, she left her marital home to care for and support her children.

Later, the caring mother established the Children's Care and Development Association, which assists thousands of underprivileged children. The caring mother has never been compensated for her efforts. Over the years, the selfless mother has received numerous jewels and gifts from various individuals and institutions, but she has never used them for her own benefit. Jimma University awarded an honorary doctorate degree on the dedicated mother in 2010. However, on June 27, 2021, the selfless mother, who had been recognized and honored for her good deeds, died.

1. What did you learn from this short story?
2. Have you heard any similar stories in your locality? If so, could you please share it with the rest of the class?

The benefits of volunteering for those in need are self-evident. Indeed, it is these benefits that may explain why volunteering is becoming more popular around the world. Let us now look more closely at why volunteering is so important, with the following key benefits of this selfless act.

Figure 6.6 group of people participate in volunteering

① Volunteering connects you with others

Volunteering is an important and enjoyable way to meet people of all ages, ethnicities, and social groups with whom you might not otherwise interact. Because volunteering is open to anyone, it allows you to meet people from all walks of life, which can only broaden your horizons. Committing to a shared activity with new friends while also strengthening existing relationships is one of the best ways to meet new people and deepen existing ones. Thus, volunteering introduces you to others who share your interests and passions and who may become lifelong friends.

1. Is it making you happy that you'll be able to meet someone you've never met before as a result of your volunteer work?
2. What do you believe are the most significant benefits of meeting someone you've never met before?

① Volunteering builds self-confidence

1. Participating in various volunteer activities can help a person boost his/her self-esteem. Do you agree with this point of view?

Working as a volunteer gives you a sense of accomplishment while also increasing your self-esteem. Volunteering also makes you feel better about yourself, which allows you to return to your “normal” routine with a more positive outlook on your own life and future goals.

Volunteering can be a valuable and insightful way to boost your self-confidence if you are shy or afraid of new situations. This increase in self-confidence was found to be strongly related to improved communication skills, especially among young volunteers who were previously hesitant to meet new people.

① Volunteering is important for a sense of purpose :-Volunteering can be extremely rewarding. Volunteering gives you the opportunity to address a social issue that is important to you while also providing you with a sense of purpose. Volunteering can be an effective way to give your life new meaning and direction, regardless of your age or life experience. Volunteering makes youth feel more connected to their communities, improves their academic performance, and are less likely to engage in risky behavior.

Volunteering can be an effective way to give your life new meaning and direction.

① Volunteering is important for your future career:- Volunteering allows you to put important workplace skills like communication, cooperation, problem solving, planning, and organization into practice. Volunteering can be extremely beneficial in an increasingly competitive job market. It shows prospective employers that you are self-motivated and willing to volunteer your time to make the world a better place for others.

Volunteering can be extremely beneficial in an increasingly competitive job market.

1. Did you realize how beneficial it is to participate in volunteer work?

To recap what has been discussed thus far, volunteering allows you to:

- ★ connect with others,
- ★ enhance self-confidence,
- ★ develop a sense of purpose, and
- ★ pave the way for future employment opportunity.

1. Now it's up to you to think of some extra benefits of volunteering besides the ones mentioned above. With the support of your parents, list any additional benefits of volunteering that you can think of aside from the ones stated above and cross-check with the list of students sitting next to you?
2. Have your parents ever participated in a volunteer activity where they helped others without being paid? If this is the case, ask your parents about their experiences and share your family's experiences with the class.

6.4. Aspects of Community Engagement

Community engagement does not happen by accident, nor is it an idle principle; rather:

- ❶ it necessitates a strategy and planned approach,
- ❷ resources and time allocation, and
- ❸ a commitment to the issue.

Even though, the distinction between the social, economic, and political aspects of community engagement is blurred, this section focuses on explaining the social, political, and economic dimensions of community engagement.

6.4.1. Social Aspect

1. Can you give some examples of community engagement with a social component?

Individuals are defined by specific, collective, conscious, and voluntary behaviors that lead to the fulfillment of a community's social demands in the social aspect of community engagement. It is critical for people of all ages, especially the elderly, to develop and maintain social aspects of engagement. The goal is to improve public service quality and make it more relevant to communities. As a result, there should be a procedure in place in the planning of services to increase community engagement in the creation and delivery of services.

In the context of educational services, for example, students cannot be considered passive listeners, teachers cannot be seen passive executors of predetermined curricula, and parents cannot be considered passive receivers of complaints and results. Because education is a complex and diverse process, multi-sectoral strategies that are essential to overall development and success are required. As a result, the active participation of a diverse range of partners such as families, teachers, communities, private enterprises, and government and non-governmental organizations in its planning, management, and evaluation is required. Thus, involving communities in education must be recognized as a fundamental principle of action within an overall development strategy.

Involving communities in education must be recognized as a fundamental principle of action within an overall development strategy.

1. Is it necessary to involve the community in school activities? Please discuss with your partner sitting next to you the significance of involving the community in the school.

6.4.2 Political Aspect

1. Please for a group of five students and with the help of your teacher list out some examples of political community engagement?

The political aspect of community engagement is an essential component of a democratic political system. The voice of the people is critical in political decision-making. Political participation is defined as any activity that shapes, affects, or includes the political sphere.

Political engagement is viewed as a voluntary activity in which members of a community, either directly or indirectly, participate in the selection of their rulers and the formulation of public policy. Voting, seeking information, holding meetings, making financial contributions to political parties, staging strikes and demonstrations, and communicating with legislators and other influential figures are all examples of political engagement. The most active form of political engagement, however, is membership in political parties, which includes campaigning and voter registration, writing and delivering speeches, and running for public and party offices.

Therefore, in order to keep our country's democracy healthy, we must all stay informed about current events as well as the long-term consequences of political actions. When we are dissatisfied with what we see in the political arena, we must speak up. Men and women have an equal right to participate fully in all aspects of the political process in this regard. As a result, by taking the time to learn about and participate in the political process, you are benefiting both your community and the country as a whole.

6.4.3. Economic Aspect

- With the help of your parents list out some examples of economic aspect of community engagement? Compare your list with the students sitting next?

Community engagement, as a concept, is central to development because of its ability to influence, challenge, and change the status quo for the benefit of all community members. The economic aspect of community engagement refers to the inclusion of many different types of community members in a continuous process of community development. It is also regarded as an evolutionary process in which project beneficiaries influence the direction and execution of development initiatives as active participants rather than as passive recipients of project benefits. Thus, one of the most important responsibilities of funding and implementation agencies, including governments, is to engage the community.

1. If a government or non-governmental organization is developing or carrying out a development project in your area, ask your family to what extent they have been involved in both the identification and execution of the project. Also, talk about your parents' positive and negative experiences with the students sitting next to you.

Communities that choose to participate in development initiatives not only gain more satisfaction from the joy that comes from their participation, but they also achieve more results and benefit the community as a whole. Communities that participate in development programs outperform those that only pay lip service to this important principle. A community's organized engagement in a development effort is increasingly expected to:

- ★ lower project costs,
- ★ expand service coverage,
- ★ encourage technical and administrative flexibility,
- ★ improve operation and maintenance,
- ★ increases project acceptability,
- ★ leads to more equitable benefit distribution,
- ★ encourages local resource mobilization, and
- ★ ensures project sustainability.

Unit Summary

Community has a sense of place, whether it is a physical location or a virtual space. Communication and relationships are essential for the development of a community. People form relationships as they communicate and interact with one another. Individuals who have a high level of interaction in a specific area become one of the components that contribute to the formation of a community.

The term “community engagement” combines the words “community” and “engagement,” shifting the emphasis from the individual to the collective. The democratic principle that everyone who is affected by a community-wide issue should have a say in how decisions are made underpins community engagement. Citizens are said to be “engaged” when they participate actively in decision-making. That is, they actively participate in defining issues, identifying solutions, and establishing action and resource priorities. Community engagement is important because it allows people to use local knowledge, to build trust, to empower the marginalized group and to solve local problems.

Voluntarism, on the other hand, is one aspect of community engagement. Volunteering is the unpaid contribution of one’s time, effort, and talent to a need, cause, or goal. Volunteering allows a person to make a personal contribution to the greater good. Indeed, its very nature and essence are linked to the human need to serve others and advocate for social issues. It is a critical strategy for assisting individuals and communities in need. Volunteering thus has numerous advantages for both the volunteer and the community, individual, or organization to which they contribute.

Unit Review Question

Part I: Write “TRUE” if the statement is correct and “FALSE” if the statement is incorrect.

- 1) Community engagement is a one-way process.
- 2) Communication and relationships are necessary for the development of a community.
- 3) In order for community participation to be successful, only a certain group of people must participate.

---

Part II: Each of the questions or statements below is followed by four possible responses or completions. In each case, choose the CORRECT option.

- 1) Community formed based of the following, except?
  - A) force
  - B) ideas
  - C) interests
  - D) identity
- 2) One of the following statements is NOT the importance of community engagement?
  - A) the people can feel like they are an integral part of the process
  - B) people passively accepting the decision of the authority in power
  - C) the people contribute a lot to solve whatever problems they face
  - D) more likely a community is to be successful in achieving its goals
- 3) Which one of the following statement is TRUE about volunteering?
  - A) is the paid commitment
  - B) is a mandated or contractual activity
  - C) is a selfless action
  - D) all of the above

Part III: Short answer. Write the appropriate answer for the following questions.

- 1) What are the advantages of volunteering for both the volunteer and the person doing the volunteering?
- 2) Compare and contrast the three aspects of community engagement?

C R I T I C A L   T H I N K I N G

Introduction

Welcome to the final and seventh unit of the citizenship education textbook. We hear the term “critical thinking” a lot, but few people stop to consider what it means or how to apply it. The unit will clarify what critical thinking entails. The importance of critical thinking will also be discussed in this unit. Finally, the unit will identify the fundamental critical thinking skills.

Learning Outcomes: At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

Unit Outcomes

At the end of this unit, learners will be able to:

- Describe the meaning of critical thinking;
- Explain the importance of critical thinking;
- Demonstrate the skills of critical thinking.

7.1. The Meaning of Critical Thinking

- Have you ever heard of the phrase critical thinking?

The ability to analyze information objectively and make a reasoned decision is referred to as critical thinking. The importance of objective analysis cannot be overstated. This means that one must remain objective while analyzing information from a variety of sources. Someone who relies solely on one source of information cannot be objective. To make an objective and good decision, the information must be triangulated or checked from multiple sources. It entails evaluating sources such as data and facts. There are numerous information sources available in our modern era. Friends, teachers, neighbors, television, radio, newspapers, books, films, social media sites such as Facebook, and so on can all provide you with information. However, we must analyze and critically question this information because not all information is equal. There are sources of information that are true and beneficial to us, as well as sources of information that are false and harmful to us. For example, once upon a time, your citizenship education teacher asked the class a question about whether colonialism promotes or violates human rights. Students who go by the group name “the lion” argue against colonialism and believe that it violates human rights. Students with the group name “the tiger” argue in favor of colonialism, believing that colonialism promotes human rights and thus ensures equality and freedom. Members of the “lion group” argue that historically, colonial powers oppressed their subjects, and that under oppression, human rights cannot be promoted. Members of the “tiger group” claim that colonial powers built many roads and bridges in the colonized nation. The “tiger group” is adamant that poor countries should be colonized.

The “lion group” believes that poor countries should never be colonized because the negative impact outweighs the positive impact. The “lion group” contends that colonial powers construct roads and bridges solely for the purpose of exploiting the natural resources of colonized nations. Which group is the most persuasive?

Which group do you belong to, the lions or the tigers? Colonialism creates inequality, violates human rights such as freedom of expression and equality, and exploits resources. Citizens of various nations colonized by colonial powers were not treated equally.

As a result, the lions' argument is persuasive and acceptable. Individuals living in colonized nations were not always treated equally before the law. They also did not have the right to free expression. They were not allowed to express themselves freely. You are aware that colonialism is a source of exploitation and oppression. Many African resources were exploited and taken by colonial powers. Many Africans were also persecuted as a result of colonialism. You are aware that our country, Ethiopia, was not colonized as a result of the efforts of our forefathers and mothers. We would have been oppressed and our resources would have been exploited if our country, Ethiopia, had been colonized by colonial powers.

To reach a conclusion and make a decision, we must evaluate the information to determine whether it is true or false. To solve problems or make decisions, good critical thinkers can draw reasonable conclusions from a set of information and distinguish between useful and less useful details. You are a good critical thinker if you clearly understand what is true and what is false. Critical thinking is not about gathering information. A person who has a good memory and is well-versed in facts is not necessarily good at critical thinking. A critical thinker can infer consequences from what he or she knows, and he or she understands how to use information to solve problems and find relevant sources of information to inform him or her.

Case Study

Obang is a university student. Obang considers Facebook to be an important platform for connecting with friends and relatives who live in different parts of the world. Obang relies solely on Facebook for information, in addition to making new friends. He considers all information that circulates on Facebook to be important and relevant

1. Do you believe that obtaining all information from social media platforms such as Facebook is important for us?
2. Do you believe that all information and news on social media platforms such as Facebook are always true and credible?

As a college student, Obang is expected to triangulate any information to other sources, whether true or false. It is critical to remember that just because Facebook is one possible source of information does not mean that there is no fake news.

There are a lot of irresponsible Facebook users who spread fake news and information. These irresponsible Social Media users typically have bogus accounts and profile pictures in order to avoid accountability. Taking a specific piece of information as true without first analyzing and triangulating it is extremely problematic and dangerous. As previously stated, analyzing information is an essential component of critical thinking. According to the story above, Obang is not a critical thinker because he takes all of the information on Facebook for granted without analyzing it.

1. What did you learn from the above case study?

7.2 The Importance of Critical Thinking

- Can you give some examples of problems that occur as a result of poor critical thinking?

conversely, there is information that is fake/false and is unimportant to us. As students, we are expected to be concerned about whether or not the information is reliable. You are aware that in our daily activities, a variety of decisions are made based on various types of information. As a result, when we make a decision, it should be based on accurate information.

Critical thinking promotes a more in-depth understanding of the topics you read about. There is no doubt that critical thinking is important for a variety of reasons. Being critical in general, and critical thinking in particular, has numerous advantages. In this section, we will look at some of the advantages of critical thinking. It is a well-known fact that people today have greater access to information than ever before. As previously stated, there is correct information and,

1. In critical thinking getting true information is very important. If someone makes a decision based on false information, our decision is bad and will have negative consequences in our lives. For example, you may learn from a friend that cheating is not illegal. Your citizenship education teacher may inform you that cheating on any exam is wrong and has serious consequences for your life. Remember that you are now getting information from two different sources about whether cheating during an exam is right or wrong; the first is from a friend, and the second is from your teacher. Before deciding whether or not to cheat, you must first determine which sources of information are reliable. The information you received from a friend that there is nothing wrong with cheating during an exam is false. Your teacher's advice to not cheat in any exam, on the other hand, is correct. So, deciding to cheat during an exam is a bad decision based on false information. If you decide not to cheat on an exam, you are making a good decision based on accurate information. You can see how important it is to make informed decisions based on accurate information.

Some students make decisions based on false information. These students are not critical thinkers because they base their decisions on inaccurate information. If a classmate advises you to cheat or wishes to cheat from you, inform him or her that cheating is not good for everyone. If a student passes an exam by cheating, the cheater's life will be harmed in the long run, as will society as a whole. If a nurse passes an exam by cheating and then works in a clinic to help the community, the nurse is more of a problem creator than a problem solver. Because the nurse may not treat his or her patients well due to the fact that he or she passed exams by cheating. In other words, because he/she cheated on the exam, this nurse lacks the necessary skills and knowledge on how to treat a patient. What you can take away from the preceding idea is that any decision should be based on accurate information.

2. Critical thinking helps us to raise fundamental questions and problems in our community. It will assist us in reformulating the various problems that are prevalent in the community. It teaches us how to be open to alternative ideas and opinions, as well as how to assess our own assumptions, implications, and practical consequences, and how to communicate effectively with others when attempting to solve complex problems. There are many important values in our country, Ethiopia. There are some cultural practices that are also unimportant in our community. For example, while the cultural practice of female genital mutilation has decreased over time, there are still some practices that should be abolished once and for all. As critical thinkers, we should question this cultural practice and fight for its abolition in our community.

3. It is very important to note that critical thinking plays a vital role in promoting democratic processes. As you may recall from unit three, in a democracy, the people have the final say over who governs and for what purposes. Citizens should vote, evaluate various public policies, and collectively decide their fate. As a result, it is critical that citizens make as informed and rational decisions as possible. Many of today's most serious societal problems, such as poverty, environmental destruction, ethnic conflicts, society's moral decay, high levels of corruption, violations of basic human rights, and displacement, to name a few, are largely the result of poor critical thinking. As a result, critical thinking is critical for mitigating the aforementioned problems caused by poor critical thinking.

7.2. Skills of Critical Thinking

- What exactly do we mean by the term “critical thinking”?
- Did you have such critical thinking skills as a student?

Students like you are expected to have the critical thinking skills listed below. Every one of you must have these critical thinking skills in your life. Having these critical thinking skills will help you succeed in your academic life, and your country Ethiopia will benefit from them as well, because Ethiopia requires a large number of critical thinkers to address the challenges and problems that exist in the country and, if possible, beyond it. Let's take a look at some of the critical thinking skills listed below.

7.3.1 Analysis

Analytical skills are one of the first and most important critical thinking skills expected of students like you. The ability to examine something is central to analysis as a critical thinking skill. As previously stated, we now have access to information from a variety of sources. One of your friends, for example, may advise you to respect everyone regardless of their religion, language, culture, gender, or skin color. The other friend, on the other hand, may advise you to only respect your family members. As you can see from the examples above, you have two choices: respecting everyone or respecting only your family.

You must now analyze/examine whether these two pieces of advice are equally important or not. The first piece of advice, that every human being must be respected, is sound. Whereas the second piece of advice, which states that only your family members should be respected, is not a good idea because it excludes other people. It is your responsibility to critically analyze the two options presented to you when two options are presented to you. When analyzing something or an issue, make sure to look at it from multiple perspectives. Make certain that your analysis is founded on accurate data. If you examine it from various perspectives, your decision will be beneficial to both you and your country.

Case Study

There are two students in your class who are at odds with one another. While those students are fighting, some students simply observe them without intervening. Students who are watching believe that the conflict should be resolved through force, which is why they are watching them while they fight. Other students, on the other hand, want these conflicting students to stop fighting and discuss their issues peacefully. These students believe that the conflict should be settled peacefully through dialogue. However, the two opposing students do not wish to settle their dispute peacefully. Rather, they want to resolve their disagreement forcefully.

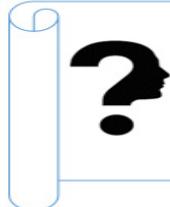

1. How, in your opinion, should the student conflict be resolved? Why? Talk about it in groups.

Because conflict may arise between two students for a variety of reasons, the disagreement should be resolved peacefully rather than forcefully. Do you want to observe two of your classmates fighting each other, or do you want to help them stop fighting and resolve their conflict through discussion? You now have two options: either assist them in stopping the fighting or simply observe them while they fight. You must determine which option is more important than the others. If you choose not to assist them, you are making a poor decision because fighting between students has many negative consequences, including physical harm and disruption of the teaching-learning process.

If you decide to assist these two conflict partners, you are making a wise decision because, first and foremost, fighting is bad for all of us, and second, fighting disrupts your class's teaching and learning process.

Your decision to assist these conflicting students is a sound one because you recognized that any conflict should be resolved peacefully rather than forcefully. Your decision to assist these students is a good analysis and demonstrates that you have the critical thinking skill known as analytical skill. As a critical thinker, you must also advise your classmates to avoid using force during a conflict. Analytical students usually examine whether something is important or not, understand what it means, and properly explain the implications of that thing to others. Students with analytical skills understand that fighting is wrong and can properly explain why to the rest of their classmates.

7.3.2 Teamwork

- Do you have any teamwork experience?
- What did you do in groups?
- What advantages did you obtain?

Another important critical thinking skill expected of every student like you is the ability to collaborate with other students. It is critical to recognize that teamwork is an essential component of our success in the teaching learning process. For instance, if your teacher assigns you a group project, teamwork is essential. As a team member, you will need to collaborate with others and communicate effectively in order to solve various types of problems. Everyone benefits when students collaborate to complete a task. Students may expect to see this in a variety of ways. In the school, for example, team members plan ahead of time and collaborate to assign tasks, assess progress, and deliver the group assignment on time.

Students are expected to participate in fruitful discussions in which differing approaches and opinions are shared and evaluated respectfully. Even if certain students are assigned tasks that were not their first choice, jobs are completed with few complaints because they are done in the spirit of teamwork and with the overall goal in mind. The group leader is frequently the facilitator of teamwork.

In this case, each student respectfully participates in discussion, completes assigned tasks, and defers to the leader in the best interests of the goal. Consensus is wonderful, but not always possible, and an assigned team facilitator will often support and facilitate the decision-making necessary for quality teamwork to exist.

Teamwork entails establishing relationships and cooperating with other students while employing a variety of critical skills and habits:

- Working cooperatively
- Sense of responsibility
- Contributing to groups with ideas, suggestions, and effort
- Communication (both giving and receiving)
- Healthy respect for different opinions, customs, and individual preferences
- Ability to participate in group decision-making

1. What is the most enjoyable aspect of teamwork?
  2. What is the most difficult aspect of teamwork?

Case Study

As previously stated, teamwork is critical to success in the teaching-learning process. Did you watch the Ethiopian National Football Team (nicknamed Walias) play against other nations' national football clubs on television? Every student in the group work, like a football team working together to score a perfect goal, has a specific role to play in completing tasks assigned to the group. Although it may appear that one player, primarily the striker, scored the goal, it was made possible by many people's planning, coordination, and cooperation to get the ball to that player. Your teacher seeks students who understand not only how to work well with others, but also that not every player on the team can or will be the one to receive the ball. When everyone involved in the teaching-learning process collaborates to complete tasks, every student achieves more.

1. What did you learn from the preceding case study?

7.3.3 Creativity

Creativity and innovation are two other critical thinking skills that are expected of every student like you. Coming up with a solution that no one else has thought of before is what creativity or innovation entails. If you are given a task, it is critical that you be creative, bringing a new idea that is distinct from the rest of the students.

Case Study

Assume you have 35 students in your class. One of your classmates comes from a low-income family and cannot afford to purchase a guidebook. Keep in mind that having this guidebook is critical for all of you. Many of you have this guidebook because your families bought it for you because they have the means to do so. One of your classmates, on the other hand, is underperforming because he or she is not reading guidebooks. Remember that many of you are doing well because you have a guide book that is assisting you greatly.

Given your classmates' predicament, you all decided to ask your families to contribute some money to your friend's cause in order to purchase a guide book for him/her. Your families have now given you 35 Ethiopian Birr. 34 of the total number of students (35), contributed some money. It's time to visit the local bookstore and purchase the required guidebook for your classmate. Unfortunately, the book seller informs you that the money you have is insufficient to purchase the guide book. The guidebook costs 40 Ethiopian Birr

1. What do you take away from the preceding case study?
2. How did the student come up with a creative solution to the problem?

7.3.4 Problem Solving

Problem solving is another critical thinking skill that is expected of every student, including you. Crossing or overcoming the obstacles and barriers that stand in our way of success is what problem-solving is all about. There are numerous issues in our daily lives, including those in the school compound. It is critical to recognize that no matter where we work or learn, we face problems that require solutions on a daily basis.

As a result, it is essential for each of us to be able to solve the problems that we encounter in our daily interactions. For example, you might witness a fight between two of your close friends. Prior to the conflict, you and the conflict students were studying together and assisting one another. You and your friends are well-known in the school where you study together; however, unlike in the past, because your friends are fighting, you are not studying together. The disagreement between your friends has harmed your friendship and, more importantly, has harmed your academic performance.

Because you are a mutual friend, it is your responsibility to solve your mutual friend's problem. If their disagreement or problem is not resolved, it will be an impediment to your academic success. You are now convinced that you must solve the problem. However, before you attempt to solve their problem, it is critical that you first understand their problem. You must first listen to what they have to say. Your friends should be given the opportunity to express their thoughts to you. After you have listened to their viewpoints, it is critical that you facilitate and propose mutually satisfactory solutions for both of them. It is also critical that you remain objective. You may be able to solve your friends' problem in this manner.

Summary

The ability to analyze information objectively and make a reasoned decision is referred to as critical thinking. It entails assessing various sources of information, such as data and facts. There are numerous sources of information in our modern era. Information can be obtained and accessed from friends, teachers, neighbors, television, radio, newspapers, books, films, and social media platforms. Critical thinking is not about gathering information.

A person with a good memory and knowledge of facts is not necessarily capable of critical thinking. A critical thinker can infer consequences from what he or she knows, and he or she understands how to use information to solve problems and find relevant sources of information to inform him or her.

Being critical in general, and critical thinking in particular, has numerous advantages. One of these advantages is that it allows us to address fundamental questions and issues that are prevalent in our community. Human rights violations, ethnic conflict, poverty, and environmental destruction are all problems caused by poor critical thinking, and they can only be addressed by developing good critical thinking skills. Every student is expected to have basic critical thinking skills such as analysis, teamwork, creativity, and problem solving.

Review Questions

Part I: Write TRUE if the statement is correct and FALSE if it is wrong.

1. All sources of information are always credible.
2. Critical thinking is merely accumulating information.
3. Taking particular information as if true without analyzing and triangulating is very problematic and dangerous.
4. Being a critical person in general and critical thinking in particular has many benefits.
5. Teamwork is one of the skills of critical thinking which is helpful for every student.
